Dollars Rush Back to U.S.; Foreign Gold Bloc Quavers

Currency Chaos Reigns as Price Goes Up, Not Down.

Demand Outweighs Value of Content

Pound Ratio Declared Futile in Face of Buying Frenzy.

By Elliott Thurston.

A chaos of world currencies marked its second day of the New Deal dollar.

The rising tide of dollars rushing back to our shores threatens to drive the gold bloc countries off the gold standard and indefinitely postpone an agreement with England which the Treasury is now eager to reach in order to hold the dollar and pound in a fixed ratio.

As long as capital is pouring out of the Old World into the New, agreement appears not only impossible, but officials can not divine the future. And if the gold bloc is forced off the gold standard, the only barometer by which the Administration can tell whether it is making its decreed dollar value of gold effective will disappear.

Dollar Up, Not Down.

Again yesterday the rush to buy dollars sent the dollar up, when the Administration wants it to go down. So valuable did this make the dollar that gold in London was worth about $34 an ounce, in Paris about $39 an ounce, instead of the Treasury's $35 an ounce price.

Prof. George F. Warren's gold theory again failed to work, because of other factors—chiefly, the demand for dollars, which outweighs mere gold content of the dollar.

How long this exodus of capital will drain the foreign markets, no man can tell. At any time, the French can stop the loss of gold by an embargo. They and the rest of the gold bloc, as well as the British and the sterling group, can always erect barriers to thwart the outflowing tide. Meanwhile, the new gold content of the dollar bears no calculable, mathematical relationship to the value of the dollar.

In other words, President Roosevelt's effort to stabilize the dollar in terms of gold has so restored faith in the dollar that its gold content has become relatively unimportant in determining its value.

This has released forces of such unceremonious magnitude that, for the present, confusion reigns. All that officials can be sure of is that the

Doctor's Wife Found Dead; Believed Suicide

"Drawback to Husband," Says Note Left by Mrs. Baber.

Apparently a suicide, the body of Mrs. Flora M. Baber, 44-year-old wife of Dr. John M. Baber, well-known physician, was found by a maid in a room at the Dodge Hotel yesterday.

A note declaring she had been a "drawback to my husband" and pleading that "everybody make things easy for him" was found by police.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald declared he thought Mrs. Baber had taken poison. He ordered an autopsy performed, however, before issuing a formal certificate.

No bottle or other evidence of poison was found in the room. Mrs. Baber had rented the room Wednesday, it was learned. She dated the note February 1—Thursday.

Dr. Baber, who lived with his wife at 1819 G street northwest, said Mrs. Baber had left their apartment Wednesday, stating she was going to Des Moines, Iowa, to visit her mother.

The first inkling Dr. Baber had of the tragedy, he said, was when police notified him on finding his wife's body.

Dr. Baber told police that his wife had been ill and had been exceedingly overwrought.

Senate Shuts Money Marts To Defaulters

House Due to Approve Ban on Bonds or Loans of Debtor Nations.

By Franklin W. Ballman, Jr.

Without debate or a roll call, the Senate yesterday adopted, in an amended form, the Johnson bill penalizing nations in default on debts due the United States Government by denying them an American money market.

Seldom has so momentous a piece of legislation been passed so quickly or in an atmosphere of such general indifference, as this measure which may affect international relations.

Under the bill, expected to receive a speedy House approval, 18 nations in arrears for a total of $662,106,837 would be denied the right either to float bonds or borrow money in the United States, except in special circumstances.

If any of these nations expect to take advantage of the American money markets they must first re-adjust or pay up their defaults. The same is true of their political obligations.

Moreover, nations such as Great Britain and Italy, which have made "token" payments on their war indebtedness as a symbol of their good will and acknowledgment, are penalized because the bill classified together those nations in default on any part of their obligations.

This measure is expected to have reverberations when this Government attempts negotiations of trade agreements or further adjustment of the war debts. In British circles here the contention has been made that once this Nation characterizes the English people as debt defaulters they will live up to the name and never agree to paying another penny on the debts.

The bill leaves the way open, however, for the RFC to finance exports to any of the defaulting countries. This exception was regarded as important in view of the President's efforts to stimulate foreign trade, especially with Russia.

The provision in the bill which leaves open the way for RFC loans except to any of the defaulting countries, free the operation of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund to deal in securities of any of the governments in default.

Groundhog Snoozes; Sun Goes Down; When Does Winter End?

Groundhog day has come and gone, but it's anybody's guess as to whether winter weather is good for another six weeks or spring is just around the proverbial corner.

Washington's official groundhog let down his public yesterday, because he had emerged from the Zoo warehouse, his temporary home, into the snow and cold might have brought on pneumonia, or at least a chill.

Maybe, too, he was influenced by the fact that his predecessor curled up and died last February 5, three days after he had seen his shadow.

If Mr. Woodchuck had gone out, he would have seen his shadow on the snow all right, because the sun was shining brightly. Rather, there would have been a shadow to see; groundhogs are reported to have poor eyesight.

By default, then, Washington is in for six more weeks of winter weather.

Relief Shorn Of Politics By Roosevelt

All Partisanship "Out," Emergency Council Directors Told.

Won't Use Organization as Nucleus for Democrats.

By Leon Durr, Jr.

In a vigorous talk to the 48 State directors of the National Emergency Council, President Roosevelt yesterday struck anew at political interference in Government, urging them to be "hard-boiled" toward any and all seeking to make capital out of human relief.

"This work has nothing to do with partisan politics—nothing at all," the President told the group, assembled before him in his Executive office.

"A great many of you are Republicans, a good many are Democrats—quite a number do not belong to one party or the other. We are not the least bit interested in the partisan side of this picture."

Democratic Build-up Denied.

This statement was taken as the Administration's reply to printed reports the emergency council would be made the framework of an immense Democratic organization, reaching, as it does, into every State in the Union. The President's remarks constituted a flat denial that anything of the sort would be countenanced.

Mr. Roosevelt's speech was informal, but none the less emphatic. The State directors, meeting here under the direction of Frank C. Walker, executive director, filed into his office, were introduced in turn for a handshake, and then formed a semi-circle about his desk as he enunciated his policy.

"We do want you to be absolutely 'hard-boiled,' the President said as he spoke, 'if you find any local person within your own State who is trying to get political advantage out of the relief of human needs; and you will have the backing of this Administration 1,000 per cent, even if you hit the biggest political boss in the United States on the head in carrying out this general program.'

"I think it is awfully important for the country to realize that relief—the carrying out of the principles behind the National recovery act, the carrying out of public works and all of the other ramifications—is based on a conception that is far beyond local politics or the local building up either of a political machine or a party or personal machine."

Politics Carries On.

The President attributed 90 per cent of the New Deal's local failures to politics.

"Where we have fallen down in these past months," Mr. Roosevelt said, "in about 90 per cent of the cases, the falling down has been caused quite frankly by individuals who try to get either personal or political credit out of something that ought not to have either of those factors in the work in any shape, manner or form."

These remarks, the President said, constituted "a few personal observations, based on certain experiences, four years in Albany, war work here during the Wilson Administration, and a certain amount of experience in the last few months."

Appointment of Walker to head the Emergency Council, which will

Thousands of Dollars Lost in Clothing and Furniture.

A three-alarm fire last night threatened the four-story Potomac Bargain House establishment at 490 Main avenue southwest.

The fire broke out shortly after 9 p. m. as two additional alarms were quickly sounded. The building is within 50 yards of numerous temporary Government structures. Firemen kept close watch to prevent it spreading to these.

Thousands of dollars worth of second-hand clothing, furniture and other material stored in the building were believed destroyed.

Fire was discovered by Lawrence Young, colored, who lives next door, at 492 Main avenue southwest.

Four men armed with sub-machine guns and pistols killed Policeman Forbes McLeod in robbing the Needham Trust Co. Bank at Needham, Mass., of $14,500. Another policeman, a fireman and a vault attendant were wounded.

The largest haul was made at Pennagrove, N. J., where four gunmen seized bags containing $130,000 and escaped.

Another robber quartet held up the Union Trust Co. Branch Bank at Rochester, N. Y., and fled with about $10,000 and $15,000.

Six employees were kidnapped but later released by robbers, who obtained $23,000 from the First Coleman National Bank at Coleman, Tex.

Use Captives as Shields.

Needham, Mass., Feb. 2 (P).—One policeman was killed and three men wounded today when four bandits, with sub-machine guns, robbed the Needham Trust Co. of $14,500, and escaped.

Two bank officers, Arnold Mackintosh, treasurer and John B. Riordan, teller, were kidnapped and used as shields by the bandits. Riordan jumped from the car. Mackintosh held on as the bandits tore through Needham Heights shooting, as they went, two of the four victims. Then he, too, jumped.

The policeman was shot through the abdomen and leg four times as he responded to the bank's burglar alarm. He died.

Walter H. Bartholomew, 75, vault attendant, Patrolman Frank Hadcock, and Timothy Coughlin, a fireman, were also wounded.

Mercury Again Recedes, With Traffic Still Hampered.

Six persons were dead in this area as the mercury dropped further last night to glaze treacherous streets and roads, caked with the slush of Thursday's 8-inch snow.

With nearly a score in hospitals recovering from accidents caused by the wintry onslaught, Weather Bureau experts forecast rising temperatures during this afternoon, although subsiding weather was expected early today.

Rural communities within a 100-mile radius of Washington were crippled by the snow. Thousands of school children in Maryland, the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and other contiguous sections were unable to get to schoolhouses with bus travel paralyzed by highway conditions.

Milk and produce transportation to the Capital also was hampered by road conditions on highways leading to this city. Melting temperatures promised for today are expected to give relief, and all available snow removal apparatus was in operation.

Curfew Didn't Ring Last Night, Or Anything Else in Centralia!

Centralia, Ill., Feb. 2 (P).—You couldn't get a shave or a haircut, go to the movies, or get inside of a bakery in Centralia tonight—all over a shoe company fireman.

This town of 12,000 was closed up tight due to rapidly spreading sympathy strikes that started when 450 employees of the Barnes shoe factory walked out in efforts to force the company to discharge a foreman against whom they had a grievance.

About all residents were certain of were lights, water and food. Strikers permitted the municipal electric and water plants to run. Grocers continued to serve customers, although bakeries shut up shop along with motion picture theaters, barber shops and mines.

About 2,000 union and nonunion workers were striking, and leaders said they would remain out until a satisfactory agreement was reached with the shoe company, determined to retain the foreman.

Other trades and labor organizations which have joined the strike included carpenters, painters, printers, hod carriers, electricians, plumbers, bricklayers and plasterers. So widespread was the movement that even nonunion workers walked out. City authorities reported CWA workers, too, had put down their tools.

City officials reported no disturbances had occurred.

Both factory officials and union leaders hinted a settlement might be reached soon.

Mayor McNeil said a conference had been planned.

The shoe factory workers said they sought the discharge of the foreman because "he is abusive and treats us like dogs."

Former Commerce Aid Is Released Under Attorney's Bond.

His Clients Agree To Study of Files

Former U. S. Official Is Named in Destroying of Paper Also.

By Martha Dalrymple.

Arrested by the United States Senate, William P. MacCracken, former aeronautics chief of the Department of Commerce, was free last night under personal bond of his attorney, Frank J. Hogan.

Charged by the Senate Mail Contract Investigating Committee with refusing to produce correspondence relating to air mail contracts and with permitting some of these records to be removed from his office and destroyed, MacCracken was arrested early in the evening by the Senate sergeant at arms, Chealey W. Jurney.

One split second before Jurney's arrival, MacCracken had received a waiver from the last of his air line clients permitting him to produce for the Senators all his correspondence. MacCracken's refusal to turn over his files to the committee had been based on a claim that the documents were privileged matter as between attorney and client, and that he was not free to make them public without the authority of his nine air line clients.

Pledges Senate Appearance.

In view of the last-minute development, Jurney accepted Hogan's personal bond that MacCracken will appear before the Senate when called, which will probably be at noon on Monday, when the Senate reconvenes.

Hogan, who was prepared to sue for a writ of habeas corpus for his client, decided to do nothing further after he was assured that MacCracken was at liberty to reveal the contents of his correspondence files.

Meanwhile, the much-discussed records were under the care of committee investigators, who will spend the week-end sorting them and selecting the material relevant to the air mail inquiry. They were deputized by Jurney to be responsible for the appearance of the documents.

Teuton Heaven Goal of Nazis

Move to Oust Bible for Nordic Legends Gains Huge Following.

Berlin, Feb. 2 (P).—A new German cult—a religion with a "German" heaven and a dogma replacing the Bible with Nordic myths—was envisioned today as an equal of Protestantism and Catholicism.

Since last July 30 when about 100,000 Hitlerites, who consider themselves religious but disavow Christianity, held a convention in Eisenach and declared their responsibility "for our Germanic origin before the Divine reality," the movement has grown apace.

And the appointment of Alfred Rosenberg, head of the Nazi foreign policy division and a bitter anti-Semite, as supervisor of all organizations, including church bodies, taken over by the Hitler party led to the belief in church circles that the "third religion" will eventually be accorded the dignity of official recognition.

The Eisenach resolution read: "We, adherents of a Germanic faith which derives its guiding strength from the religious inheritance of the German people, whose creative religious power has remained alive through more than 1,000 years.

"We all confess that, rooting in divine reality, we are responsible with our Germanic origin before this divine reality, and before our people for a German-born faith."

A leader in the movement recently said that Naziism and Christianity are incompatible.

"Germany's great aim," he said, "must be one people, one religion, one church. The one religion, of course, can be only a Nordic-Germanic one."

The national socialist revolution must become transformed into a heathenish-Germanic one; then only will the revolution have achieved what we all hope for."

Regarding the conception of heaven, Church Councillor Richard Leuthausen, of Sankt Pauli, said at a recent convention that "in the German heaven our German language will form the tie that binds human soul to human soul."

World Trade Drive Begun By Roosevelt

Sets Up Import-Export Credit Bank; Plans Tariff Pacts.

By Raymond Clapper.

The Administration is beginning to move toward the green pastures of world trade as the next grazing spot in the recovery effort.

Two developments yesterday gave significant evidence of this.

First, it was announced that the Government is setting up an export and import trading bank with RFC funds. Its purpose will be to give financial assistance to American business in buying and selling with Russia primarily and also with Latin America and other parts of the world.

Second, President Roosevelt indicated he expects to send a tariff message to Congress at this session. The purpose of this is to open the way for a greater influx of imports so that foreign countries can in that way pay for increased purchases it is hoped they will make here.

What the President will recommend is not definitely known, but he probably will ask authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements so that imports can be correlated to domestic production more directly than at present.

Now Looking Abroad.

Last summer's wave of intense nationalism which followed the disillusionment of the London Economic Conference is passing. For a time the Administration seemed to despair of looking abroad for any help in recovery. It turned its effort inward with almost furious intensity, to drive through a program of economic self-containment.

Picturing the United States as working inside a high protective wall, NRA was counted on to force up wages. PWA was expected to stimulate domestic buying power with its $3,000,000,000 kitty. AAA was to hold down farm production to domestic needs and thus boost rural purchasing power.

That was the picture last August. Officials, or many of them, realized that this could not remain the complete picture. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has gone up and down the country warning that either $1,000,000,000 of foreign goods would have to be admitted every year to finance farm exports or else millions of farms would have to be put into idleness for lack of mouths to be fed. Secretary of State Hull, even in the midst of the wave of nationalism last summer, continued to preach the doctrine that the United States would in the end have to come to reciprocal trade. Even Ogden L. Mills, the Hoover Secretary of the Treasury, only this week switched his economic philosophy and deserted the simon-pure protectionist tariff for a policy of foreign buying and selling.

Start of New Program.

Launching of the import and export trading bank is a far-reaching step in the new program.

"This is not going to be a white-ship game," said Chairman Jesse Jones of the RFC, falling back on his Texas poker language. "We are going to furnish the bank roll to keep the game going. There are going to be considerable transactions."

The bank will be organized under the District of Columbia banking laws immediately. Its offices will be in the RFC Building. American manufacturers, desiring to sell to Russia, say, but unable to obtain private bank credit to finance their manufacturing and sales, will be able to obtain from the Government trading bank a guarantee of some percentage of the credit. It is anticipated that after the bank begins to function private bankers will be interested in taking over parts of such credits.

Although it is being set up as an emergency agency, the bank is expected to be doing business for a long time to come—at least ten years.

Aim at Russian Trade.

In the case of Russia, officials hope to recover $90,000,000 a year in sales which have disappeared in the last couple of years. They believe this trade was lost primarily because of lack of credit facilities for American manufacturers.

Officials say the trading bank is the only phase of a correlated foreign trade program. Eventually it will be a part of a coordinated plan, they believe, which will seek to adjust imports on a trading basis.

Russia, for instance, can sell to the United States manganese, furs, tungsten, platinum and vodka without trading seriously on the toes of American industry. America can sell all sorts of machinery to Russia.

If the tariff policy works out as contemplated, this process will be refined down to the point where an administration policy board will attempt to determine what American industries legitimately need protection, what ones are sturdy enough to stand on their own feet, and which are so intrinsically weak that they might as well be left to shift for themselves against an open import door.

Wet Publicity In Dry Air Hit By Radio Board

Liquor Ads Legal, But May Cost Stations Licenses, Commission Hints.

Radio stations carrying liquor advertising will be required to show that their continued operation will serve the public interest before their licenses will be renewed, the Federal Radio Commission announced yesterday.

While the order did not specifically bar liquor advertising on the air, it asked broadcasters to "bear in mind" that millions of listeners do not use liquor and that many children are listeners.

The Columbia Broadcasting System recently barred advertising of hard liquor but did not ban advertising of beer and wine. There was nothing, however, to prevent liquor advertising by individual stations in the system.

Threatens New Examinations.

The commission's order said: "The Federal Radio Commission calls renewed attention of broadcasters and advertisers to that section of the Radio act of 1927 which provides that stations are licensed only when their operation will serve public interest, convenience and necessity, and that the intelligent cooperation of both groups in so far as liquor advertising is concerned."

"Although the 18th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States has been repealed by the 21st and so far as the Federal Government is concerned there is no liquor prohibition, it is well known that millions of listeners throughout the United States do not use intoxicating liquors and many children of both users and non-users are part of the listening public. The Commission asks the broadcasters and advertisers to bear this in mind."

"The Commission will designate for hearing the renewal applications of all stations unimpaired of the foregoing and they will be required to make a showing that their continued operation will serve public interest, convenience and necessity."

WOR Tells Drys Not to Listen

In spite of the Commission's warning, station WOR, New York, went on the air last night with a program advertising a brand of gin.

Preceding the program, the following announcement was made: "Those listening in from dry States may now tune out this station, for the next program is not intended to offer alcoholic beverages for sale or delivery in any State or community wherein the advertising, sale or use thereof is illegal."

MacCracken, Arrested, Gives Up Air Records

uments before the bar of the Senate along with MacCracken.

The arrest and subsequent liberation of the former Government air official climaxed a day full of dramatics for the Senate investigating committee.

Files Removed.

Evidence that MacCracken had permitted Col. L. H. Brittin, executive vice president of the Northwest Airways, and Clifford Given, secretary to the president of the Western Air Express, to remove certain "purely personal" files from MacCracken's office Thursday came as a surprise at the committee meeting in the morning.

Senator Black (Democrat), Alabama, promptly called his conferees into executive session to prepare the request to the Senate to arrest the witness.

Meanwhile Black's investigators got hold of Brittin and Given and learned that Brittin had destroyed the records he had taken and that Given had sent his chief, Harris Hanahue, in New York by special delivery late Thursday night.

Black announced this from the floor of the Senate after he had introduced his resolution.

Friendly Arrest.

MacCracken's arrest, which took place in his office, was a pleasant affair. His captor, Journey, impeccable in a way, took off his big black hat with a flourish and announced: "Why, hello, old pard."

"Hello, Mr. Journey," greeted the captive more formally but just as generally.

MacCracken called his attorney and the three went into a jovial huddle in a small private office. When they came out, it was all over. MacCracken had been arrested, and Journey had accepted Hogan's word that he would be responsible for the captive's appearance before the bar of the Senate.

Although the receipt of the final waiver of the right of privilege removes one of the charges on which the Senate might cite him to the Federal Court for contempt, the fact that MacCracken permitted records to be removed from his office after he had been subpoenaed by the committee to appear with these records, may still be deemed sufficient for a contempt citation.

Sensor's Attitude Changed.

The entire political aspect of Black's committee was changed by this admission on the part of MacCracken. Heretofore Senators Austin of Vermont and White of Maine, the two Republicans, have maintained a consistent opposition to Democratic majority. They have constituted a self-appointed cross-examining body.

In effect the action restores to MacCracken the principle that he was entitled to claim privilege from producing his records, they were admittedly embarrassed by the revelation of what they termed a "serious offense."

Senator White, who was present at the morning's committee hearing, characterized the action of MacCracken, Brittin, and Given as one of the "most foolish things I've ever heard of."

Termed Lobbyist.

"If Mr. MacCracken's clients have done such a fool thing as to take these files, I can't get excited about fighting for the principle of privilege in which I firmly believe," concluded White. "I have no objection to the majority opinion."

Senator Austin, later on the floor of the Senate when Black's resolution was introduced, subscribed almost verbatim to his colleague's opinion.

Voicing the majority opinion on the principle of privilege Black said that MacCracken had not been employed by his clients in a purely legal capacity, but as a lobbyist, to represent them before Congress in an effort to secure legislation and before other Government agencies to secure mail contracts.

"It is my belief that the employment of an attorney to aid in breaking down competitive bidding or to secure advantages over another competitive bidder is contrary to law and to public policy," he said.

Reject Privilege Claim.

After the committee had voted unanimously that they would not accept MacCracken's privilege claim, the witness was once more asked to produce the records. He asked to be excused while he telephoned for legal advice from his law partner. The committee waited 10 minutes. When the witness returned he announced that he still felt he could not produce the records, although he offered to do all in his power to secure the return of those files removed on Thursday.

Black crisply adjourned the hearing took his colleagues in tow and started preparations to ask for MacCracken's arrest.

The hile air lines for which MacCracken has acted as Washington representative are Western Air Express, Transcontinental and Western Air Express, Kohler Aviation Corporation, Goodyear Zeppelin Corporation, Ludington Air Lines, Northwest Airways, Pan-American Airways, New York, Rio, and Buenos Aires Lines and Richard E. Robbins, president of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation.

Brittin, who gave MacCracken authority to waive his claim of privilege after he had removed part of his correspondence from the office, explained to newspapermen last night that the letters he took were purely personal.

"We have nothing to conceal," he said.

Black's committee has adjourned until Tuesday. The program for the day has not been determined yet, and will probably depend upon any action the Senate may take on Monday.

he could identify Alcorn and that he and Mrs. Boettcher would be glad to go to South Dakota to appear against both men.

Both outlaws, agents said, confessed their parts in the Boettcher case. Sankey, who also admitted he helped kidnap Haskell Bohn in St. Paul, was questioned for information concerning the abduction and slaying of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., but denied connection with that crime.

Alcorn, fireman on a Canadian locomotive when Sankey, the South Dakota rancher held the throttle, was making ready to flee from Chicago when agents raided his apartment.

Alcorn was found living under the name of Walter Thomas. His wife, with whom he had lived quietly since last May, opened their apartment door when agents knocked. She also was arrested.

$10,000 Verdict for Grain Articles Won by Friend.

Chicago, Feb. 2 (AP).—Arthur W. Cutten's ghost writer in a propaganda campaign for less Government regulation of grain trading was awarded a $10,000 judgment today for services rendered.

John R. Mauff, a former director of the Chicago Board of Trade and Cutten's bosom friend and neighbor for years, had asked for $50,000, but expressed satisfaction with the verdict.

"I am grateful to the jury for believing me to be an honest man," Mauff said.

Traffic Gaining Fast At Salt Lake Airport

Salt Lake City, Utah (AP).—Passenger traffic through the Salt Lake Airport showed a substantial increase during 1933 and this year will bring further development in air travel, V. G. Halliday, airport manager, predicted.

During last year, 35,000 passengers went through the Salt Lake terminal, one of the largest air terminals in the United States, Halliday reported. The daily average was 91 persons.

Business through the airport, including airmail passengers, express and private planes, was handled through the following companies: Boeing Air Transport, Inc., Western Air Express, Inc., Varney Airlines, and National Parks Airways, Inc.

Wind Blows Hat, Car Kills Owner

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 2 (AP).—His hat cost the life of Frank Cuckler, 76, a Sophia section farmer.

A gust of wind blew the hat across the highway near his home. Retreating, Cuckler started back, but failed to see an approaching automobile, which knocked him to the pavement and fractured his skull.

He died in a hospital without recovering consciousness. The driver of the car was exonerated.

form information and recovery machinery in every State, prompted much of the comment as to its political possibilities. His resignation as treasurer of the Democratic National committee last November was recently disclosed, however, and it has been made clear the recent White House statements against political interference were by no means directed toward him.

"We Are On Our Way."

"We are all behind, with few exceptions, this broad recovery program," the President said. "We think it has done good. We believe we are on our way. We believe it is working out pretty well in all sections of the country."

In this connection he mentioned a conversation with a railroad official, in which the latter said not only were freight and passenger cars increasing but also the freight showed a healthy growth in every classification. This he considered an illustration of the fact "we are building up economically in every section of the country, including practically all industries."

Closing, he urged that the Administration be kept informed of conditions throughout the Nation, invited suggestions and hinted at another meeting in Washington five or six months hence.

Another Louisiana Election Planned

Gov. Allen Will Set Date on February 20.

Baton Rouge, La., Feb. 2 (AP).—Gov. O. K. Allen said today he would issue a proclamation February 20 setting a date for another special election in the Sixth Louisiana District to fill the seat declared vacant last week by the House of Representatives.

The House declined to seat either Mrs. Bolivar E. Kemp, sr., or J. Y. Sanders, Jr., holding that neither had been legally elected.

Mrs. Kemp was declared elected with the backing of the Long-Alcorn administration in a suddenly called election without a primary early last December. Sanders was subsequently declared the new Representative in a citizens' protest election.

Nation-Wide Ickes Asserts Milk Monopoly Oil Companies Inquiry Asked Ads Unchecked

Big Companies Extend Grip on Industry, McCarran Charges in Senate.

The extent of the monopoly on the Nation's milk supply would be investigated by a special Senate committee of five members under a resolution introduced yesterday by Senator Patrick A. McCarran (Democrat) of Nevada.

Quick passage of the resolution will be sought by its author, who said he was confident it would be adopted.

Large holding companies are monopolizing the dairy industry in Washington and elsewhere through the country, and evidence uncovered by the District milk investigating subcommittee tends to show that the companies are "continuing to merge and consolidate in order further to monopolize and control the milk markets of this country," the resolution said.

Continuation of these activities "will in the end destroy the already hard pressed agrarian populace," it was added. Producers in the Washington area have been receiving less than cost of production because of the stifling of competition, and similar conditions exist elsewhere, McCarran charged.

The investigating committee would be directed specifically to investigate monopolies or monopolistic efforts, conspiracy in restraint of trade, operations by holding companies lessening competition, and unfair competition.

Senator McCarran said he would propose appointment of Elwood H. Seal, assistant corporation counsel of the District, as special counsel of the investigating committee. Mr. Seal was counsel for the District milk sub-committee. An appropriation of $100,000 is provided.

Berlin, Feb. 2 (AP).—The German News Bureau said today Dr. Wilhelm Frick, minister of the interior, had instructed his subordinates in the German states to dissolve all monarchist societies.

120,000,000 Francs Leave In Gold Exodus

Bank of France Loans Shipments to U. S. With Anxiety.

Paris, Feb. 2 (AP).—Bank of France officials watched the departure of huge gold shipments to the United States closely today, but expressed confidence the institution could stand any drain on gold.

Two ships, the Berengaria and the Bremen, took out 120,000,000 francs of gold ($7,600,000 at today's closing quotation) for the Federal Reserve Bank in New York. In a week 280,000,000 francs have been sent to the United States.

The American dollar, meanwhile, gained 2 centimes on the bourse, and closed at 15.67 francs (6.38 cents to the franc), compared with the opening at 15.57 francs (6.42 cents), and last night's close at 15.55 francs (6.39 cents).

Some of the gold shipments will be used for regular business settlements, for France's usual average trade balance accounts for about 5,000,000 francs daily. This must be paid in gold. Equalization fund purchases will be in addition to the settlements.

London Sees Paris Off Gold Standard Soon

London, Feb. 2 (AP).—Banks and bullion dealers rushed for gold to the United States to take advantage of the American gold premium.

The inference drawn from pictures of great American liners on the front pages of London newspapers was that they would be loaded with the gold standard, with gold being shipped to America.

It was said authoritatively today that the United States Government anticipated this last week, and engaged safety deposit space in many ships in an effort to control the shipments.

Unless gold is carried in the ships' vaults, the insurance rate becomes so high that it is unprofitable to make the transfers.

With sterling following the dollar, interest became centered in the gold drain from France, and informed American observers expressed the opinion that France would have to place an embargo on the shipments—virtually abandoning the gold standard, within two weeks, if present conditions continue.

A desire to transfer American and British funds to the United States to participate in an expected Wall Street boom was said by traders to be an important factor in the dealings.

Police, Fire Pay Raises Sought

Mrs. Jenckes Submits Bill to Restore Automatic Salary Increases.

A move was made in the House yesterday to restore automatic pay increases for police and firemen in the District while the Senate Appropriations Committee was voting to restore all automatic promotions in Government service.

Representative Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana, introduced a bill to amend the economy act to eliminate police and firemen from the pay raise prohibition.

In a formal statement she pointed out that police and firemen enter their respective departments at a minimum salary "and are supposed to be promoted periodically until the top grade in their class is reached, which takes approximately eight years."

With automatic increases enforced and the 15 per cent deduction, their salaries reach a low point, she said. She also pointed out that police and firemen are subject to extra duty at all times without added pay and do not receive 30 days vacation as do other Government employees.

Indian Massacre Record Revealed

Tribal Village Wiped Out 300 Years Ago.

Whitehall, Mich. (AP).—The story of a great Indian massacre on White Lake, probably 300 years ago, has been disclosed in research by Fred Hubbard and today had found supporting evidence in Smithsonian Institution records.

Through early French records to which he gained access and legends related many years ago by Indians then believed to be more than 100 years old, Hubbard learned that a fortified village of the Pottawatomie tribe was sacked by a warlike band which outnumbered them.

The attackers laid siege, that almost exterminated the village. The survivors were cornered on a peninsula on the lake during an attempted flight and annihilated, Hubbard learned.

Nazi Employee's Report About His Boss Upheld

Berlin (AP).—A Nazi cell leader may not be dismissed for making a damaging report on his employer to Nazi headquarters, the Berlin Labor Court has just ruled.

In the case before the court, a foreman of a certain plant made a full report to his Nazi organization on his employer's business, and used strong invective against the employer himself.

The court declared that this report was "confidential" and not meant for the public. Hence the invectives therein did not afford grounds for dismissal.

The court further stated that, considering the foreman's "simplicity," the strong words he used in his report about his employer were pardonable as he could not be expected to be familiar with the more polite phraseology ordinarily used in such reports.

250 Courses in Cultural and Professional Subjects Offered Post Winners at Catholic U.

Wide Range of Subjects Open in Scholarship Competition.

Campus, One of Largest in District, High Above Capital.

Four great centers of learning, situated on campus heights that overlook the Nation's Capital, have offered, through The Washington Post Scholarship Competition, tuition scholarships for young men and women, to study the arts and sciences at their several universities, within observation range of a vast Governmental machinery that daily shapes world events.

Each of these institutions bears its insignia of individuality, to meet different demands of a complex society. Together they join hands with The Post to encourage the pursuit of higher learning in the light of today's momentous political developments.

This is the second of a series of four articles in which The Post will describe the four universities contributing these scholarships—American, The Catholic University of America, Georgetown and Howard Universities.

From aeronautics to architecture, chemistry to civil engineering, or the classics, with history and government on one side and modern languages and economics on the other, 250 courses are offered for consideration of secondary school seniors looking toward higher studies amid cosmopolitan influences at either the College of Arts and Sciences or the School of Engineering, of the Catholic University of America, Georgetown and Howard Universities.

For those who are planning to become physicians or lawyers there are the premedical and prelegal courses of study; others whose trend is toward a business career will find the commerce curriculum of interest. Some high school graduates prefer to make their decisions after reaching college, and for them the general course leading to either the bachelor of arts or the bachelor of science degree opens the way to a profession or graduate work.

Engineering subjects for students who wish to concentrate on specific subjects. Carefully planned curricula lead toward the chemical and civil engineering fields; others to electrical and mechanical engineering, and a new field, for which consecutively organized courses have been arranged, is that of aeronautical engineering.

Two Divisions for Architects.

Two paths are open to those who lean toward architecture, one which stresses planning and design, while the other, architectural engineering, considers largely the mechanical and constructional problems of the profession.

The headquarters of the School of Engineering is located in the Martin Maloney building, which houses the chemical engineering museum, one of the largest and best equipped university buildings of its kind in this part of the country. Beneath the auditorium is the aerodynamic laboratory, equipped with three wind tunnels containing instruments for testing models of planes for wind resistance and also the headquarters of the Glider Club, whose members build their own machines.

The Catholic University has long been interested in aviation and related subjects. The first wind tunnel in America was built on the campus in 1901 and from the experiments conducted in it by Dr. Zahm came the present design for dirigibles. The development of aviation has also brought with it legal problems which are a specialty for those who continue through the School of Law.

McMahon Hall Campus Center.

The center of campus activity is McMahon Hall, to which all eyes turn many times each day to look at the official university clock. Here are the administration offices and classrooms, the physical and psychological laboratories, the general museum with its varied collections of man's and nature's handiwork; the biological laboratory and the herbarium for student assemblies and general lectures and the library and classrooms of the School of Law. In McMahon Hall also, are the postoffice and bulletin boards, where letters from home and notices of university events and activities attract daily attention.

Across the campus on Michigan avenue are the three dormitories for resident students and the center of life for the 400 young men who attend the college of arts and sciences and the school of engineering. Albert Hall, of red brick, and the oldest of the three, contains the offices of the student council and the Tower, the undergraduate weekly newspaper; also the old dining hall, now used for class and club meetings. The office of the dean of men, the medical office and the infirmary, together with rooms for upper classmen, fill the remainder of Albert Hall.

Gibbons, the largest dormitory, contains a reception hall and the college chapel. In Graduates Hall is the dining room, seating 400, and in the basement is a restaurant and soda fountain which give continuous service from breakfast time to the bedtime snack at 11. On the upper floors live part of the freshmen, the others living in old St. Thomas Hall, just beyond the most outstanding building on the campus, the Mullen Library, of white limestone with red-tiled roof. At night-time this is illumined by a floodlight from the roof of Albert Hall.

Site Purchased in 1887. St. Thomas is the oldest building at the university. It originally was the manor house of the Middleton family, which, with 60 acres of land, was purchased in 1887 as the site for the Catholic University. The Middletons were a hospitable people and entertained many of Washington's famous visitors and several Presidents in their home. The "rolling land" to which the visitors referred has been largely retained and added to from time to time until now there are approximately 150 acres on the campus, one of the largest properties in the District of Columbia. At the present time this is being transformed into an arboretum which will contain all the plants, shrubs and trees that will grow in climate.

Know That Snapper, Bell.

Each evening at dinner time the cats approach, leaping from back fences, alleys and the roof of an adjacent storehouse. They spring to the narrow walk in Herr Olbert's yard. The walk is known as the Ringstrasse.

"The Ringstrasse minus all its glamour and glitter," laments Herr Olbert.

Their meals finished, the cats doze until the lights wink out, then vanish.

"But they are good Viennese," chuckles Herr Olbert. "Too good Viennese, in fact. Each night they become musical and serenade me—sometimes, I think, too enthusiastically and too much."

Utility Valuation Hearing Recessed

Interest Figures Conflict in Final Session.

Gas valuation hearings before the Public Utilities Commission were recessed yesterday, after Assistant Corporation Counsel William Roberts had introduced a figure on interest during construction, which was $107,131 lower than that offered by the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light Companies.

The adjournment is indefinite, subject to five days' notice before resuming.

'Lost' Ship Beats Gales, Broken Gear, Makes Port 19 Days Late

Crew Cuts New Shaft With Only Chisels and Files for Tools.

Saint John, N. B., Feb. 2 (AP).—The steamship Svartisen, "probably lost" two weeks ago, made port today.

She sailed from Grangemouth, Scotland, December 30 and battled storms and ice 35 days. Capt. O. Jenloff, middle-aged Scandinavian, brought her through.

The Svartisen, 2,000-ton collier, ordinarily makes the crossing in 16 days. The waterfront marveled to-day she had made it at all. Three days ago H. B. McCann, manager of the consignee company here, said: "We have just about given her up as lost."

The Svartisen ran into storms as soon as she sailed. Driving gales smashed seas against her day after day. Some days, going full speed into the wind, she scarcely made a mile.

"It can't last forever," said the crew.

Three weeks at sea and the storm was worse. Waves actually broke over the bridge.

A steel shaft in the steering machine broke. For two days the Svartisen was steered by hand. Then the hand gear went. The ship rolled in the seas. Capt. Jenloff ordered the rudder lashed fast.

"A loaded ship can always be managed if you're careful," he explained today.

While the ship drifted, Capt. Jenloff and his men worked day and night with a chisel and a hand file—the only tools available—to save themselves.

Their problem was to repair the steering machine. Using the file and the chisel, they cut a replacement shaft from one of the winches. It was too thick. So they went to work with the hand file to trim it down.

"It was a difficult job, replacing the shaft," Capt. Jenloff said, "but we kept at it every minute for four days and nights, and then it was done. Everybody in the ship took a hand at the fitting. I think that's just sort of a rough passage, that's all."

When she made port, the Svartisen had 130 tons of coal left in her bunkers.

The ship is not equipped. "But," said Capt. Jenloff, "there was never any time we thought we could not make port. Nothing happened. It was just sort of a rough passage, that's all."

Retrial Sought For Slayer, 18

Writ Deplores Lethal Gas 'Slaughter of Newark Youth.'

Denver, Feb. 2 (AP).—Presenting the "intense human argument" that "a child of 18 years should not be slaughtered," a brief seeking a new trial for Walter Reppin, of Newark, N. J., convicted slayer, was filed with the Colorado Supreme Court today.

Reppin's execution in the new lethal gas chamber at the State prison has been temporarily stayed by the appeal.

The New Jersey boy was convicted of fatally shooting Vincent Regan, Colorado Springs tax driver, in an attempted robbery. He originally was sentenced to die early in January.

Nation-wide interest has been aroused in Reppin's case, because of his age and as the result of a report submitted to Gov. Ed C. Johnson by Dr. William J. Donahue, a Newark psychiatrist, which classified Reppin as a "mid-moron."

Panama Assassin Plot Hits Official

Vice President to Resign After Threat to Arias.

Panama City, Feb. 2 (AP).—Prominent citizens of Panama were implicated today in an alleged plot to assassinate President Harmodio Arias, and as a result of the investigation Domingo Diaz Arosemena, Vice President of Panama, will resign today. Arosemena's nephew, Jose Jimenez, has been questioned by police.

The Vice President declared his honor was involved, and that until the trial and conviction of the guilty was completed, he could not remain in office.

State Will Ask Death Penalty For Dillinger

Outlaw and "Dead" Pal Reindicted; Close Guard Kept.

Crown Point, Ind., Feb. 2 (AP). John Dillinger, Hoosier desperado, was reindicted today on a charge that would require the death penalty if he were found guilty.

The new charge is murder while committing robbery. He will be arraigned Monday.

Also named was John Hamilton, alleged companion of Dillinger on many lawless escapades, whom Dillinger and others of the gang in custody have asserted was dead. Lake County officials, however, denied he was dead, and said they have many leads to his hideout, where they said his gunshot wounds were being nursed.

Dillinger, accused with Hamilton of the murder of Patrolman Patrick O'Malley during a bank robbery in East Chicago two weeks ago, was returned to Crown Point Tuesday from Tucson, where he and three of his gang were arrested.

A constant vigil was kept on the Lake County Jail by orders of Sheriff Lillian Holley.

East Chicago police have detailed special guards to witnesses for the State who were in the bank when the holdup occurred, and the prosecutor would not make public their names as a precautionary measure. The State law provides that no penalty but death can be inflicted for the crime of murder during perpetration of a robbery. No official can lessen the sentence.

Three Changes on

Navy Airplane Profits Probe Slated Monday

House Naval Affairs Body to Study All Factors of Production.

A sub-committee of the House Naval Affairs Committee Monday will begin investigation into alleged profiteering by manufacturers of airplanes for the Navy. Representative John J. Delaney (Democrat), New York, heads the sub-committee.

While the committee was planning a complete investigation, President Roosevelt announced an inter-departmental study to establish a uniform Federal aviation policy. At the same time, Representative John J. McSwain, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, introduced a bill providing for a separate Army air force, with a personnel of 37,000 officers and men, and with 4,834 airplanes. McSwain and with 4,834 airplanes. McSwain Thursday introduced the Army's aviation bill, providing for a five-year plan and a maximum of 2,000 planes.

Phases of Inquiry.

The Naval Affairs Committee adopted a resolution seeking to ascertain profits in manufacture of airplanes, airplane engines and aeronautical equipment; if any profiteering is taking place; whether there has been any collusion between manufacturers with respect to Government contracts; if development and procurement can be improved; and other phases, and to report by March 1.

The subcommittee is prepared to ask the Navy Department for facts and figures relative to costs of airplane manufacturing. It may also go into income tax returns of aviation companies.

The inquiry was ordered by Committee Chairman Vinson, following disclosures before the House Appropriations Committee, indicating one engine manufacturer made a profit of 36 per cent. In another instance, a profit of 21 per cent by an airplane manufacturer was shown. The committee has in its possession a special audit of aircraft manufacturers' books from 1927 through 1933.

Greater Efficiency Sought.

Greater efficiency was given as the purpose of the President's proposed interdepartmental study. "The study," the announcement said, "would seek to ascertain to what extent coordination may be effected and greater efficiency attained in promoting and fostering aviation for military, commercial, air mail, and private flying purposes."

The President authorized Secretary Roper to initiate the study. McSwain's Army aviation bill, while retaining the Air Corps under the War Department, would separate it from the General Staff, making the chief of the Air Corps with the rank of lieutenant general, responsible only to the Secretary of War.

The bill also provides for 4 permanent major generals and 13 permanent brigadier generals. Other grades, from second lieutenant to colonel, would total 5,241.

The personnel strength, together with the 4,834 airplanes, would be achieved in five years from July 1, 1934.

Police Dog Gets Habit Of Muzzling Animals

Cape Girardeau, Mo. (AP)—"Nigger," a black police dog owned by Homer Simpson here, has a hobby of "muzzling." A few days ago "Nigger" appeared at the Simpson home, a kitten in her mouth. After the Simpson family fed the cat, the dog made a practice of sharing her food with the kitten. Several months ago the dog took five baby rabbits from their mother and watched after them until they were grown. Later the dog adopted two groundhogs.

Navy Air Chief at Plane Profits Probe

Or a Jobberwork, Maybe?

"'Twas Brillog and the Slithy Coves, Did Gire and Gimble in the Wabe; Well, Anyway, Those Sea Serpents Were 'See' Serpents."

(Scotland and Washington State papers please copy.)

The National Geographic Society yesterday concluded at long distance, that the Loch Ness and Puget Sound sea serpents might have been a flock of ducks.

In fact, the august body concluded that the monsters, serpents or what-not might have been any of a number of things except monsters, serpents or what-not.

Maybe, the society declared, the great beast which is suspected to have been a prop to attract tourists to Scotland was a tuna fish, out of a can.

Further, the savants indicated the Puget Sound serpent with the big, brown eyes might have been a bevy of sharks playing "follow the leader" in single file.

Among the things which were described as possible sea serpent imitators were the Mediterranean ribbon fish 30 feet long, sea worms 45 feet long, giant squid 50 feet long, sea weed, or sea lions.

They failed to mention astigmatism or delirium tremens.

No Vanishing American, Tribal Leader Says of Crow Indians

Chief Max Big Man Here to Learn His Place in New Deal.

Chief Max Big Man, of the Crow Tribe, whose home is in Montana, just a mile from the place where Gen. Custer and the Seventh Cavalry were massacred by the Sioux, is in Washington to find out where the Indian figures in the New Deal.

The chief, magnificent in his tribal regalia, is at the Harrington Hotel, with three other Indians, because "the white man is the Indian's buffalo." As his tribesmen in the old days depended upon the buffalo for their food, shelter and clothing, now they depend entirely on the Government.

The giant Crow is a living picture of the plains Indian of the day of the buffalo. And he brings news that his tribe is on the upgrade; that they are not vanishing Americans.

Speaking with pride of the schooling which children of the Crow nation are receiving in the public schools of Montana, Chief Big Man, although with regret at the passing of the free life, declared that his tribe at least is adjusted to white civilization.

Tribe Has Drawbacks.

Civilization has its difficulties, he said, and Crow children find that they are between two fires—from grammar school and from home.

It seems that in learning English, modern Crow children have made their own language into a different one, in that they speak Indian words in the order they would speak the same English words. They come home from school where teacher has been stressing grammar and speak Indian which causes old men of the tribe to shake their heads.

The others with Chief Big Man are a tribesman of his, Harry White Man, and Arthur Mandan, of the Gros Ventre Tribe. They have been received by Representative Roy Ayres, of Montana, and they will visit Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, and the Indian Commissioner, John Collier.

Crows and Gros Ventres are a people that were separated 500 years, Chief Big Man said. Because of a dispute over buffalo, two chiefs separated the tribe. Part of the tribe followed one chief from Dakota to Montana.

This tribe became the Crows. They received their name during the Lewis and Clark expedition, Chief Big Man said.

Briton Justifies Cavell Execution

Lloyd George Assailed of War Office Aid.

London, Feb. 2 (AP)—The execution of Nurse Edith Cavell by the German army during the World War was justified, in the opinion of A. Duff Cooper, financial secretary to the British war office.

Duff Cooper asked a truce in the traditional conflict between soldiers and politicians.

"Duff Cooper, in his speech today, said David Lloyd George, throughout his term as wartime prime minister, worked against the British commander-in-chief, Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig.

within the industry to precipitate such a movement."

B. M. Seymour, president of the Terminal Transportation System, said the mayor's proposal that the disputed funds be turned over to the drivers precipitated the strike.

Meanwhile streets normally choked with taxicabs, with here and there a private car, were strangely free. Traffic policemen had little to do.

Independents Operate.

Virtually the only cabs plying the streets were the independents, owned and operated by individual drivers. They had the pleasant experience of being able to choose their fares.

An organization of 2,000 single-cab owners announced they were in sympathy with the strike. The strikers planned to furnish independent cabs with stickers to protect them.

A police dispersed 1,500 striking drivers from the Grand Central Terminal and the pickets stormed through the downtown hotel district pulling drivers from their seats and wrenching license plates off cabs standing in "feed lines."

In other disturbances windshields were broken and tires slashed.

Goldsboro, N. C., Feb. 2 (AP). Rufus Satterfield, 43, alleged ambush slayer of Herbert Grice, was convicted of first degree murder today and sentenced to die in the electric chair March 16.

Unemployment Increase Under December, '32

Green Cites '33 Figures; Insists Shorter Week Still Necessary.

While unemployment in industry increased in December, the gain was less than in previous years of the depression, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor said yesterday.

Green estimated total unemployment in December at 10,826,000, compared with 10,702,000 in November and 12,124,000 in December, 1932. The figures indicated a reduction of about 3,000,000 in the unemployed since the peak was reached last March. The figures cover only industrial employment and the number would be reduced another 4,000,000 if CWA workers were taken into consideration.

Trade union figures, Green said, show CWA and PWA work checked the usual January increase in trade unemployment. Building trades unemployment decreased from 62 per cent of membership in December to 59 per cent in January.

"The immediate problem in this coming month," Green said, "is to make sure Congress provides funds for the continuation of CWA work."

He said CWA work has increased buying power $200,000,000 a month, and that to cut off this Government money would be a severe blow to business.

Green repeated his previous contention that to decrease unemployment further it will be necessary to further reduce working hours.

"By shortening work hours under codes," he said, "we have put nearly 2,000,000 back to work in industry, but hours are not yet short enough to give work to all. It would take a 26-hour week at present industrial levels to put all the unemployed back to work. Hours in December averaged 38 per week in industry generally."

50 Wait Six Weeks To Get CWA Pay

McCarl Ruling Grants Funds to Drivers.

Pay of 50 CWA workers, held up for six weeks by a technical ruling of the disbursing officer of the Veterans' Administration, was released yesterday under a ruling by Comptroller General McCarl.

The men had been employed to drive CWA supervisors to the various projects.

Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, received notice yesterday from the Comptroller General's office the payments were in order.

Liquor Trust Charges Start Two Inquiries

Department of Justice, Trade Commission Sift Complaints.

Two investigations to determine whether there is a liquor trust are under way in Washington. One is being conducted by the Department of Justice and the other by the Federal Trade Commission.

Complaints charge that distillery interests are in collusion to keep up the price of liquor. It was said at the Department of Justice that sufficient information had not been obtained to determine whether action should be taken. The Federal Trade Commission is gathering evidence.

Both investigations are based on a brief filed December 15 by Lewis Landis, attorney, at a hearing before the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees. Landis is attorney for the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Committee of the City of New York.

Landis declared there is no shortage of bourbon, rye or blended whisky and that reports of a shortage have been circulated as part of a program for keeping prices up.

Illness Is Fatal To McCormick, Noted Author

Member of Harvester Family Also Famed for Inventions.

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 2 (AP)—Leander Hamilton McCormick, 74, of Chicago, internationally known author and inventor, died today after a lengthy illness.

Chicago, Feb. 2 (AP)—Leander Hamilton McCormick, who died at Miami Beach, Fla., today, was one of nine grandchildren of Robert McCormick, and a grandnephew of Cyrus McCormick, credited with invention of the reaper.

His father was Leander J. McCormick, brother of Cyrus, who followed Cyrus here when he brought the newly invented reaper to Chicago in 1847.

Leander Hamilton, however, took no part in the Harvester business. He took his B. S. from Amherst College in 1881, studied at Columbia University and later turned to architecture. He lived in London for seventeen years, then returned to Chicago.

His interests centered in the arts and sciences rather than in business. He fathered more than 100 inventions, including airplanes, aerial torpedoes, motorcycles, watches. He collected paintings, especially of the early English and Dutch schools.

In recent years he became interested in psychology and wrote two books, "Characterology" (1920) and "Students' Course in Characterology" (1931). Of the first, he presented two copies to every library in the country. Its theme is the reading of character by physical traits, such as facial and statural differences.

Mr. McCormick married Constance Plummer, of Canterbury, England. He left three sons, Leander, Jr., Allister, and Edward.

Strasburg Gets Credit Offices; Loans Speeded

5 Valley Counties Will Be Served; Orchardists to Meet Feb. 14.

Strasburg, Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—At a meeting of the Production Credit Association for Shenandoah, Page, Warren, Clarke and Frederick Counties, held at Woodstock, the directors voted that Strasburg should be the site for the head office instead of Winchester. Easier accessibility of Strasburg caused the change. The directors organized for immediate action, naming D. W. Burrus, Mount Jackson, president; J. H. Funkhouser, Winchester, vice president, and Julian Evely, Middletown, secretary-treasurer. The entire board will act as an executive committee. Other members of the board include George L. Wilkinson, Front Royal; Clifton Price, Berryville, and J. M. Shuler, Luray. Applications for loans from the association are to be filed after Tuesday with Mr. Evely.

Orchardists to Meet

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—To iron out troublesome matters in connection with Federal orchard loans asked by local growers, a meeting of all those interested in Federal orchard loans has been called for February 14, the first day of the annual convention of the West Virginia Horticultural Society here. A specialist in Governmental farm finance will be present. Complaints of unsympathetic appraisal of orchards will be heard and discussed, for possible action. Representative Jennings Randolph recently lodged with the Farm Credit Administration a protest against the present appraisal methods, saying that he had received more than 150 complaints against this "unsympathetic appraisal" of a supplemental bill to care for this "unsympathetic appraisal," declaring the President meant to give relief when these measures were drawn.

Counties' Appraisers Named

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—Directors of the Fredericksburg Production Credit Association have arranged for appraisers of this district to apply for Governmental loans. It is hoped to restrict loans to farmers who need money and are unable to negotiate loans from banks here. The appraisers' reports here have obtained production loans through the Production Credit Corporation of Baltimore.

County appraisers appointed include L. A. Briggs for Stafford County; Fredericksburg postoffice; U. V. Blanks for King George County; Sealston postoffice; W. T. Dickinson for Spotsylvania County; Partlow postoffice; R. T. Jones for Caroline County; Bowling Green postoffice.

The purposes and operating methods of the corn-hog reduction campaign will be explained to farmers of Stafford and Spotsylvania Counties by J. H. Quisenberry, district agent, and W. R. Linthicum, Spotsylvania agricultural agent, in a series of meetings.

Caroline and King George County farmers have been invited to attend. Meetings were held yesterday at Berea School, Chancellor High School and Mary's High School, and will be held today at New Hope School, Aquia Tavern, Belmont School and at the Fredericksburg Chamber of Commerce. Meetings will be held tomorrow at Concord, and Monday at Bob Briddwell's store.

Virginia Forest Fire Damage Reduced by Half During 1933

Decrease of 43,697 Acres Burned Laid Partly to CCC Work.

Charlottesville, Feb. 2 (Spl.)—The area burned over by forest fires in the 60 Virginia counties organized to control such blazes was reduced by more than half in 1933. The ground covered by 1,338 fires on privately owned land in these 60 counties last year totaled 42,584 acres, as against 86,281 burned over in 1932, according to the report just completed by F. C. Pederson, of Charlottesville, State forester, for the United States Forest Service.

This reduction of 43,697 acres was made in the face of an increase in the total area under protection. There were 10,194,000 acres under protection last year, as against 9,841,000 in 1932.

A corresponding decrease of the number of fires—from 1,735 in 1932 to 1,338 in 1933—is noted in Mr. Pederson's report. This was a reduction of 23 per cent. Also, the average size of each fire last year, 32 acres, the lowest ever recorded in the history of organized fire protection in the State, decreased.

Firebugs Set 241

The State forester's records show wardens in the 60 organized counties reported direct tangible fires of $95,300 from fires. This, Mr. Pederson noted, does not take into consideration damage to watersheds, destruction of game and wild life, impairment of recreational and scenic values and other Public Education Plea Made at Leesburg Health Session.

Leesburg, Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—"Cancer is as local as a splinter when it first begins, and can be removed as easily and successfully if taken in time," Dr. M. B. Hiden, Warrenton (Va.) surgeon, declared in an address to the Loudoun Public Health Association yesterday.

$5,000 Rum Salaries Scored by Goolrick

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—"A great mistake" was made by the House of Delegates in fixing salaries of members of the proposed liquor control board at $5,000, instead of $7,500, former State Senator C. O'Connor Goolrick, member of the commission which drafted the liquor control plan, declared today.

"To obtain men of strength of character necessary for the job at that amount will in my opinion, be impossible," he said. He said he was confident the Senate would raise the salaries to the recommended level of $7,500.

Move to Oust Mountaineers Brings Protest

Cammerer Policy May Be Economic Upset for Highlanders.

By A. R. O'Rourke. New Market, Va., Feb. 2.—The statement of policy of National park officials, as announced by Arno B. Cammerer, director of parks, with regard to driving poor land owners, tenants and squatters from their homes in the Shenandoah National Park area before it is turned over to the Federal Government, which was published in valley newspapers yesterday, is meeting with much adverse criticism throughout this section.

It is pointed out that if Mr. Cammerer pursues this policy he will not be acting in accord with the plan of former Secretary of the Interior Wilbur and other leaders in the early days of the park movement, who were solicitous of the welfare of the mountain folk.

Removal Doubtful

The announcement of the intended removal of these people—many of them poor, uneducated, superstitious men and women, and ragged, undernourished, but carefree and happy children—from their cabin homes in the mountains, has led citizens who are familiar with their daily life and conditions to discount the probability of their ever becoming accustomed to, and earning a livelihood in, the lowland settlements away from their native mountains.

Scores of years ago their ancestors settled in the Blue Ridge Mountains, never again to set foot in the lowland country, and there they bore their children, till the barren soil for their sustenance. There they lived, died and found their last resting places.

Today it is estimated more than 600 families, in excess of 3,500 descendants of these early settlers, make their home in the Shenandoah National Park area and claim the Blue Ridge as their heritage. And among those 3,500 residents of Cabbage Hollow, Lucas Hollow, Overall, Beahm, Syria, Rocky Bar, Furnace, Dean Mountain and other more remote mountain fastnesses observers say there are scarcely 100 who are qualified to meet living conditions in the lowlands.

Race of Highlanders

Those who are familiar with their daily lives say they are a race apart—highlanders, who can not be transplanted and expected to flourish in the low country.

Until the establishment of the Hoover School in the Rapidan region several years ago, education among these people was unknown, and even today only a few have ever seen a book of any kind. Ignorance is associated with superstition. And superstition, with many of these people, is given an endless variety of sources of hope and fear with regard to the good and bad fortunes of life. It has kept their minds harassed with fears.

Still Fear Witches

Persons who have visited their mountain homes point out that many of these people ascribe the tremendous power of inflicting strange and incurable diseases, particularly upon children, to witches. They also believe witches kill livestock by shooting them with "hair balls." They are unshaken in their opinion that witches inflict "spells" and curses on guns and other things. They believe witches change men into horses, bridle and saddle them and ride them over the rocky terrain to the hidden scenes of their

Plaster Cast Model Loses Eyebrows and Lashes

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—Albert Ramsburg, Hagerstown high school student, lost his eyebrows and eyelashes serving as a plastic sculpture model for two other students, Jack Beard and Roy Shannon, and his eyesight may be affected.

Tired of taking casts off still objects, the boys determined to make a mask of a living model. Ramsburg volunteered.

Plaster of Paris was spread upon Ramsburg's face and hardened. When the boys attempted to remove the mask, it stuck to Ramsburg's eyebrows and eyelashes. Water failed to soften the cast, so they tried vinegar, which when poured on Ramsburg's face, irritated his eyes and caused him intense suffering.

Finally the two, using a razor, cut the eyebrows and eyelashes. Water failed to soften the cast, so they tried vinegar, which when poured on Ramsburg's face, irritated his eyes and caused him intense suffering.

State Asked to Aid Blind Workshop

Charlottesville Institution Declared in Danger.

Charlottesville, Feb. 2 (Spl.)—A movement to have the State of Virginia take over the workshop for the blind now operated by the Virginia Commission for the Blind with funds raised by subscription, has been begun here. A petition asking the General Assembly to do this to save the workshop from being forced out of its existence by its creditors was begun by E. O. McCue, local attorney. The petition asked:

"The workshop was established upon subscriptions pledged by the blind and by the people generally of the State. It has been impossible to collect a material part of these subscriptions, owing to the depression."

The workshop has for several years had trained blind workers in such gainful occupations as broom and mattress making and furniture repairing. The proceeds from the sale of these articles has aided in maintaining the workers there. L. W. Wattle, of Charlottesville, and Richmond, is executive secretary of the Virginia commission in charge of the home.

Proles and Other Places of Rendezvous

Observers who are familiar with their condition point out that this belief in the supernatural, witchcraft, necromancy, all of the occult sciences, serves to show the relative amount of philosophical science and learning of which they are possessed, and their qualifications for competing with lowland residents for a livelihood.

Baptists Meet Next Week

Danville, Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.)—The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Pittsylvania County Baptist Association will be held at the Second Baptist Church here next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Young Writer Of Kidnap Note Wins Leniency

W. B. Taylor Confesses, Gets Suspended 5-Year Term.

Richmond, Feb. 2 (AP).—William B. Taylor, 24, today pleaded guilty to writing a kidnap threat letter in an attempt to extort $1,800 from Frederick W. Scott, Richmond financier. Judge Luther C. Way in United States District Court here gave him a suspended sentence of five years on condition that he "keep out of trouble" and continue to contribute to the support of his widowed mother, Mrs. Ina Taylor, of Seaford.

In suspending sentence, the court said it considered the youth's previous good record, the unusual circumstances of the case, the recommendation of leniency by District Attorney Sterling Hutcheson, and the testimony offered by Miss Frances B. Scott, sister of Frederick W. Scott, by whom Taylor was employed as a chauffeur.

Leon Levin, special agent of the Department of Justice, testified that Taylor, after writing a letter to Mr. Scott threatening to kidnap the latter's grandchildren, declined to accept a check for $1,800 offered him by Mr. Scott.

"Moulin Rouge" Caravan Rescued From Snowy Wastes—Film Reviewed at Rialto

Stars Delayed By Storm Have Hard Sledding

Arrive Without Luggage for Dinner Dance; Theater News.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Lashing out into the teeth of a raging blizzard from their base in the shelter of Loew's Fox Theater yesterday afternoon, a little band of intrepid explorers bore off to the north and east by dog-sledge in search of the members of the "Moulin Rouge" Caravan, reported out off from communication by the fury of the storm and perishing on the rim of the ice pack, without food and protected only by a few seal-skin coats and a ton or two of Russian sleds.

Successfully conquering the drifted treachery of the pipe-smoke carry, and arriving finally on the glacial formations at the brink of the Palapato, the hardy little rescue party eventually emerged upon a clearing in the center of which was discovered the advance guard of the Caravan, comfortably ensconced in one of Gen. Atterbury's luxurious lounging igloos, spinning tales of the hardships they had undergone and bawling the probable fate of the rest of their courageous little company, cut off from succor by a snowslide, slightly this side of the frozen wastes of Wilmington.

The Perfect Look-Out

Looking two ways at once in quest of his lost companions, Ben Turpin, the cock-eyed Mayor of Cinemaville, kept constant vigil through the falling dusk of a wicked day and over in another corner Roscoe Ates, stammered a staccato Morse code that served the double purpose of what he thinks is conversation and repeat relief calls to his icebound friends, marooned miles away behind the impassable barrier of miles of slush.

Nearer at hand, Jack Mulhall, gnawed hopelessly at a thong of frozen doe hide and Antonio Moreno, dreaming of his sunny Spain, flicked icicles from the pointed ends of his sharp Castilian mustaches. Huddled in the center of the igloo, Mary Carlisle, crunched and shivered over the incriminated finger-nails of Nancy Welford, adding a touch here and there of what dropped upon the snow with the terrorizing crimson of human blood, while a little further along Anna Q. Nilsson, that hardy Scandinavian, gazed tranquilly out the window at a scene architected to her heart's desire. Anna Q. is a winter girl, Anna Q. is.

The Wandering Wardrobe.

John Hurdley, the time, is passing reassuringly among his charges, a word of hope here, a message of encouragement there, a furtive fear somewhere else as he realizes the futility of expecting the lost wing of his expedition to put in an appearance with the baggage in time for the dinner dance in the village a scant two hours away.

What good is an Arctic explorer at dinner dances without a dinner coat, or the gals without their war paint and plumes?

You're asking me?

It is an interesting band of refugees that Gen. Atterbury has given asylum aboard his ambulant shelter. In addition to those mentioned, the party so diligently trying to forget Hollywood's vaunted sunshine and get a kick out of a patch of the winter's worst weather includes Creighton Hale, one of the veteran picture stars, not seen so much now as he used to be; Doris Hill, wondering if she'll ever get her bags; Mrs. Carlisle, keeping a proud eye on her talented daughter, who seemingly would be a beauty shop operator if she were not so gifted a young actress; Dorothy Dunbar, the titian-haired former two or three years ago. And Ben Turpin, who isn't any higher than this, knows what it is all about, too, although, like Mr. Ates, his function on the expedition seems to be to provide a note of levity with the quaintness of his jibing.

But all of this by now, no doubt, is an old story. All of Washington met these visiting luminaries at the Shoreham last evening, or saw them at the midnight performance at the Palace, or, falling either of those contingencies, will make their acquaintance at luncheon in the Senate wing of the Capitol at 1 today, or when they appear for the second time at the Palace tonight at 9. After that it will be too late.

Caravan Doubles Back.

The "Moulin Rouge" Caravan doubles back to Baltimore Saturday, as the first of 21 cities between Boston and Kansas City to be visited on the long trek that is ahead of them.

That is, if the lost portion of the expedition—which is the motor caravan itself, with all of the luggage of practically all of the stars and coryphees—including the eight or ten beautiful young women who have modeled many commercial products into a bewitching and pulchritudinous fame, is ever located and rescued from the Arctic catastrophes that pursued it yesterday up there north of 53.

Which is to say, north of 53 miles the other side of Baltimore!

Diners at the Kennedy-Warren Saturday night, which is by way of being tomorrow, will be diverted by a group of clever entertainers who were important principals in last season's "All-Washington Revue," presided over by Brooke John, at Loew's Fox. Joy Kimmel, tap dancer and master of ceremonies; Clare Coleman Borjes, a deep-throated contralto and a daughter of Harry Borjes; for Mrs. Max Baxer, still shadow-boxing with him, and off there in a swanky stateroom, Jack Whiting, not a member of the exploration group, but merely an innocent bystander trying to get to his opening at the Earle this morning.

Wholly Recovered.

Anna Q. Nilsson, it is a pleasure to report, is radiant at the touch of northern temperature and wholly recovered from the accident that at one time threatened to incapacitate her permanently. Not a minute older or less lovely than in the distant silent days of her sensational triumph in the film version of "Ponjola," and a long list of other pictures of the first rank, Miss Nilsson is braving the hardships of the present excursion to acquaint the country at large with the fact of her complete recovery and vibrant good health and spirits. She plans a return to the screen in the hope of making up all of the time and popularity her extended idleness for so many years has occasioned.

"Baby" of the Snowbound Caravan

Mary Carlisle, Jean Harlow's most imminent platinum threat, who is the youngest and most vivacious member of the "Moulin Rouge" Caravan, that came to town last night and will be much in evidence here today, goes in for fancy fingernail treatments in the grand manner. Coming into Washington on the train yesterday, she did a little plain and fancy nail painting, just to keep in practice, "so I'll have something to fall back on, in case I'm a flop in pictures."

Dorothy Dunbar and Nancy Welford, egged on by the clowning of the incorrigible Mr. Ates, are the life of the party and Mary Carlisle the most enthusiastic concerning the pleasures of the moment and the future's golden promise of a career of genuine distinction before the cameras.

Gentlemen of Paris.

While Mr. Hurdley, the master of ceremonies, may be said to have his hands comfortably well filled, he has two substantial citizens to give him wise counsel and valuable aid in emergencies, in the persons of the Messrs. Moreno and Mulhall.

These gentlemen are citizens of parts-informed, dignified, alert and with a keen eye for the main event, social, political or business. Neither has been here more recently than many months ago, but both are abreast of what has been going on since the first night of the party, which will be interesting to you concerning friends with whom he hiked through parts of Wales merely musical director at Loew's Palace, and Susan Hall, dancer, all will appear as stars of an interval of selected floor entertainment, an innovation at the Kennedy-Warren.

Author to Be Guest.

Elizabeth McFadden, author of "Double Door," will attend the opening performance of her play in the National Theater on Monday night as guest of the Smith College Alumnae Club, which has sponsored the first night of the melodrama in the National Capital.

It is also planned by the Smith College Club to tender Miss McFadden a reception during her stay in Washington, attended by many women prominent in the affairs of this city.

Miss McFadden is a graduate of Smith, studied play-writing for several years under Prof. George Pierce Baker, of Harvard, and in 1917 was a resident of Washington engaged in Red Cross work, in which she became director of the bureau of publications.

She has written a number of short plays, among them "Why the Chimes Rang," which has been played more than 4,000 times and translated into several foreign languages. She also wrote "The Product of the Mill," which won the $500 Craig Prize in Boston, and "The Child," which was played for a short time by Margaret Anglin.

Miss McFadden also is the author of several novels.

"MADAME SPY." Universal picture-story of a story by Johannes Brandt, Joseph Plan and Leo Kimmich, featuring Nita Astor and Fay Wray, with Edward Arnold, John H. Hines, Keith Beery, David Torrence and Vince Barnett. Directed by Karl Freund. Released Thursday afternoon by W. A. Whitely.

There seems to be a very definite formula to be employed in penning a spy story, especially when the central figure is a woman. Hence, "Madame Spy" is immediately catalogued, so far as its narrative is concerned, and as for offering anything other than minor variations on a theme, accomplishes no special purpose.

But, for good entertainment, pastime that is consistently interesting, rapid-moving, and enacted by a cast whose merits are well known, "Madame Spy" is everything that could be asked.

Fay Wray is the delightful spy agent marries the other side, for her own purposes and later finds herself falling in love with the man whose demise she is sworn to bring about. After many incidents depicting the working of the intelli-

West Virginia Probe Finds Son and Uncle on Rolls; Pork Also Traced.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 2 (Spl.). While arrangements were made today to call three State officials before the State Legislative Committee investigating the CWA here, a special committee of the House of Delegates at Sutton extended its probe into charges of nepotism in the Braxton County CWA management.

Officials and workers were asked: "Are you a relative of Mrs. Erma Hyer, CWA administrator of Braxton County?"

Two replied in the affirmative. One was L. W. Hawkins, subforeman on a West Sutton project, who said he was an uncle of Mrs. Hyer by marriage. Thomas Hyer, son of the administrator, said he had signed up as an electrician.

Previous testimony dealt with Federal pork and butter sent to relieve distressed families. It was testified that nine office workers for the Braxton CWA took either pork or butter meant for the needy.

State officials called before the probe here are Ernest L. Bailey, State road commissioner; John S. Hall, clerk of the House of Delegates, and L. A. Chaffin, of the attorney general's office. Bailey is to explain the general setup of a road organization.

Hall and Chaffin will be asked about administration of the CWA in Mingo County, with special reference to charges of political favoritism in selecting workers.

Bank Receiver Plan Rejected

Virginia Senate Group Refuses to Change Present Methods.

Richmond, Feb. 2 (A.P.).—The Senate committee on banking and insurance has declined to change the present method of naming liquidating agents for closed banks.

Despite pleas of Senator John J. Wicker and Maj. J. Fulmer Bright, of Richmond, to prevent repetition of costly fees paid to receivers of the American Bank & Trust Co., of Richmond, the committee last night struck from the Wicker-Tuck bill the vital features recommended by the patrons.

The subcommittee, headed by Senator T. Russell Cather, of Winchester, unanimously agreed that establishment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, insuring all deposits up to $2,500, means that the Federal agency will take charge of all member banks which fail.

The second of the Senate economy bills on the upper house calendar ran into difficulty yesterday. The bill would authorize the Governor, in his discretion, to abolish or consolidate executive department agencies, or bureaus, not set up by the constitution or statutory law, and to equalize salaries in the executive department. The bill was recommitted for clarification.

Emma's Dilemma.

Although she protested in New York that she was "as bad as ever," the generation which has matured since Emma Goldman went into exile 15 years ago will not take her protestations too seriously. She has, in fact, changed greatly, as shown by her visit to Rochester, where she worked as a shop-girl and where her revolutionary career began.

Those who remembered her as "Red Emma" greeted a gray-haired woman of 64, tired from her long journey from Canada. The tongue that had once shrieked its defiance of officers of the law now uttered only the philosophy of a tired and somewhat mellowed cynic. Miss Goldman is obviously a very different person to the energumen whose name was once connected with any number of overt acts designed to overthrow the existing order. The attack on Henry Frick, the railway strike of 1893, and even the assassination of McKinley—Czolgost mentioned her among his inspirations—were only a few manifestations of violence which she was widely believed to have approved. Now, she confesses, she has no bitterness. As she stepped from the train, she embraced an old friend and murmured, "God bless you, Lella," after the manner of a maiden aunt coming for a long-deferred visit.

The truth, as Miss Goldman may perhaps confess to herself when she gets alone, is that disillusion has her in its grip. She went to Russia seeking the Nirvana of the revolutionist and was able to endure it less than six months, although when she sailed from the United States, she said, "I expect to be recalled to Soviet America." In these days of increasing governmental regimentation she has nothing to hope from anarchy, and she has passed the age when it is easy to hate. In that dilemma she must fall back on a philosophy of tranquillity which would have been anathema to the fiery spirit of her flaming youth.

A Strange Tribute.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration reports that Pulaski County, Arkansas, is the first to report completion of its program for restriction of cotton acreage during the coming year. A telegram of January 30, proudly publicized by the AAA, says that:

Pulaski County Committee joins celebration President's birthday, announcing tabulated acreage contracted exceeds last year's plow-up, in which we led Arkansas, with 125 per cent of quota. Goal reached and still going strong. We claim first honors in being over the top.

In these pulsating phrases the committee rejoices in the county's prowess in destruction and in its readiness to curtail output during the coming year by withdrawing lands from cultivation. In fact, the committee is so proud of these negative achievements that it considers the President's birthday a fitting occasion for celebrating seal in adhering to a restriction program of antiscocial character, at best defensible as an emergency measure.

We live in strange times when intelligent men reach the point of felicitating themselves upon their willingness to quit producing and to destroy the fruits of labor, feeling that by such acts they testify to their faith in and attachment to the President of the United States.

Innocents Abroad.

The hardships suffered by Government employees in the foreign service through depreciation of the dollar arouse sympathy for the victims and just resentment at congressional delay in providing relief.

The decline in the gold value of the dollar to less than three-fifths of its former parity, combined with a salary cut of 15 per cent, has disrupted homes, reduced some civil servants to penury and forced others to go heavily into debt to meet current expenses. The evidence shows that all but the most fortunate of our diplomatic representatives have been forced to pathetic economies, derogatory to their dignity and that of the country they represent. The situation makes the Government appear as both an ungenerous and an irresponsible employer.

Efforts have been made to alleviate the hardships of dollar depreciation in gold standard countries by paying our representatives there in gold. Those resident in countries of the gold standard, however, have also suffered in varying degree from a precipitate decline in dollar exchange rates in the countries where they are stationed.

As the Treasury is now unwilling to surrender gold even to cover payment to civil servants resident in countries on the gold standard, all Government employees living abroad are entirely unprotected against the effect of a 41 per cent devaluation of the dollar. Congress should act promptly to meet this situation by authorizing the State Department to supplement the wages and salaries of Government workers in foreign countries. After the war, adjustments were made to allow for disordered exchanges and erratic price movements, with supplementary payments allowed after study of the conditions prevailing in different localities.

A similar arrangement should be approved by Congress at the present time. In fairness, it ought to authorize compensation for past losses due to abandonment of the gold standard.

Going To The People.

When he was Governor of New York, Alfred E. Smith seldom had a majority in both houses of the General Assembly. To get his measures through the Legislature, it was necessary for him to recruit more strength than was inherent in his party following. He resorted to the simple expedient of going to the people and telling them about his program. On the stump and through the radio, he sought to reduce public finance to simple terms. He found that the people responded. His successor, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has also found the technique useful in both State and National affairs.

New York City's mayor, Maj. LaGuardia, has followed suit and resorted to public appeal to aid his new administration in reconstructing the fiscal structure of the city. He went to the people by radio Thursday night urging persuasion on the assemblymen to vote for a measure empowering the Board of Estimate to revise the budget, eliminate useless offices and make other economies necessary to restore the city's credit.

Under Tammany, New York City had made few economies, in comparison with other cities, because economies meant cutting the incomes of the favored. The situation had become so bad that when bankers lent the city money a year ago, they found it necessary to exact an agreement under which certain receipts were allocated to the service of their loans. While admitting the reasonableness of the agreement from the bankers' viewpoint, Mr. LaGuardia said that it nevertheless puts the city in a "strait-jacket." It is necessary, he contends, to balance the budget by resort to drastic measures too long delayed and to accomplish a reorganization of city government to eliminate the deadwood.

It is symptomatic of the dire condition of the city that, out of sinking funds totaling $446,337,000, only $7,600,000 is in cash and virtually all of the remainder is in securities of the municipality. The teachers' retirement fund, for instance, was forced to buy $106,000,000 of city paper and holds only $1,500,000 in United States Government bonds. "The lack of vision, lack of foresight and lack of prudence" of previous administrations, Maj. LaGuardia says, have run up a total debt of $2,400,000,000, or more than eight times the city's annual income. More than $200,000,000 in taxes is unpaid.

The mayor has the difficult task of trying to prove to such groups as the teachers, for instance, that economies affecting them are in the long run to their interest. He must show that such economies make more drastic measures unnecessary and that restoration of the city's credit restores the integrity of the municipal securities owned by their pension fund. His hope of accomplishing reform rests in securing an overturn of legislative opinion by first converting the people who elect the legislators. Mr. LaGuardia needs 19 votes to make up the 100 necessary to put his legislation through. He is making an intelligent battle to get them.

Profits Of Preparedness.

If it serves no other purpose than to help clear the air, the inquiry on profits in military contracts, to be conducted by the House Naval Affairs Committee, is wise procedure.

The Government is contemplating the expenditure of half a billion dollars or more on the treaty navy program, in addition to construction already under way. Moreover, both the Navy and the Army hope to receive authorization for the construction of approximately 2,000 airplanes. If the full building program goes through Congress, the total military expenditure in the next few years will not be far short of a billion dollars.

The House indicated its attitude a few days ago when it amended the measure to provide that no contractor should make a profit of more than 10 per cent from a Navy building contract. That amendment was no doubt the outgrowth in some degree of revelations before the Black Committee regarding inordinate stock dividends and bonuses, of airplane and shipping companies, made possible primarily by Government subsidies. Moreover, the stock of airplane companies has been soaring since the first of the year.

The very fact that we are proposing to build a great air armada would be sufficient to elevate the price of airplane stock. But none the less it is well to give public consideration to some of these concomitants of feverish governmental expenditure. If it is wise to spend almost a billion dollars on a preparedness program, it is also wise to see that it is spent with a minimum of onerousness to those "money changers" against whom the Administration likes to fulminate.

No Longer Significant.

With member bank reserves approximating $950,000,000, a reduction in the discount rate of the New York Federal Reserve Bank is of little significance from the viewpoint of the private borrower or lender. Presumably, the cut is designed to facilitate the Government's financing program which calls for the flotation of $6,000,000,000 of new securities and $4,000,000,000 of refunding issues during the first six months of the present year. The lower rate will not have much, if any effect, upon the gold inflow resulting from a repatriation of American funds.

Domestically speaking, too, the change is unimportant, since the member banks are already in a position to expand credit operations almost indefinitely without having recourse to the Federal Reserve Bank. Furthermore, the Government's emergency spending program, and the disbursements of the Treasury's stabilization fund, will add to the excess reserves of member banks and increasingly emancipate them from dependence upon Reserve Bank rediscount facilities.

Suggestions that the rate reduction may stimulate private investment activity also appear to be unwarranted. The revival of the market for private capital issues has not been hindered by high interest rates but by lack of confidence engendered by currency instability, and general unwillingness of investment houses to assume the risks of new flotations under the securities act.

The Federal Reserve Banks have been converted, at least for the time being, into agencies charged chiefly with the duty of financing the needs of the Treasury. Changes in discount rates are no longer effective to control domestic credit policies or to influence the international movement of gold, which has become subject to Treasury direction. Under such conditions, discount rates cease to be instrumentalities for regulating the rate of credit expansion and contraction.

People Who Travel.

A "handout," as newspapermen describe mimeographed information sheets, from the State Department gives a fairly good picture of that great host of Americans—119,148 last year, and many more in better years—which goes abroad each year to pursue pleasure or business.

Naturally enough, the percentages follow pretty closely the wealth and population figures, except in the case of New York, city and State, which have disproportionately high positions. Of the total number of travelers, a third were from New York City and almost 9 per cent from New York State outside of the five boroughs.

Figures emphasize the fact that native Europeans have a way of going back to the old hearths for visits. More than 41 per cent gave as the reason for journeys "family matters" and another 5 per cent "personal business." The tourists were drawn, too, from States which have the largest foreign-born populations: Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Illinois, Massachusetts, California, Connecticut, Michigan and Minnesota.

While wealth was also a factor in the high percentage of those States, it did not always hold. For instance, Maryland, which is high in wealth, was extremely low in the percentage of tourists, indicating that her people are pretty well satisfied with the Free State, or else unusually insular.

Those Southern States which are inclined to boast that they have the "purest Anglo-Saxon population in the world" have also the lowest percentage of travelers, but it is more likely that their people stay at home for lack of money. Refraining from travel is common to the people of all the agricultural States. South Dakota, for instance, matched Arkansas in that each sent only one-tenth of one per cent of all our foreign travelers. Tennessee and Kansas were together at one-fourth of one per cent. Nebraska was paired off with Oklahoma, and Iowa, where the tall corn grows, was partner in statistics with North Carolina, where some of it is drunk.

The department's study explodes the old myth that three-fourths of the Americans one encounters in Europe are either teachers or students. As a matter of fact, almost 14 per cent gave their occupations as housewives and almost 12 per cent said they had no occupation. Some of them, no doubt, were housewives by avocation, if not by vocation. Students and teachers together made up only 14 per cent. One person out of every 20 carried a clerk or secretary. All the buyers of all the models that are advertised as imported constituted only one per cent of the total.

Where do Americans go? Western Europe, with its Piccadilly and Strand, its Champs Elysees, its trip up the Rhine and its Italian tour, called 86 per cent; Eastern Europe less than 6; the Near East, a little more than 7; the Far East, fewer than 5; Latin America, a little more than 5; Africa less than 1 1/2 and Australia about 1 per cent.

Certainly Western Europe is better exploited by Americans than any other section of the world. American tourists, it seems, take the advice of our 100 per cent patriots, and, even when they travel, "go back to where they came from."

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

IN DEFIANCE of the President's wishes, the House, sitting as the Committee of the Whole, passed a Japanese exclusion bill. REPRESENTATIVES WITHERSPOON, of Mississippi, and Hensley, of Missouri, members of the Naval Affairs Committee, charged that naval experts had juggled the Navy figures for 1913 to make it appear that the American Navy was inferior to Germany's. They charged that the battleships Oregon, Massachusetts and Indiana were omitted from the list of American ships, although outranking 11 German battleships. MANUEL FORMER, King of Portugal, renounced the throne. King George cut off his $50,000 pension and dropped the title of "king."

PRESIDENT AND MRS. WILSON attended the ball of the Southern Society, described as one of the most brilliant in Washington's history.

GUSTAV HAMMILL, aviator, looped the loop 14 times over Windsor Castle as the King and Queen watched. They invited him to lunch afterward.

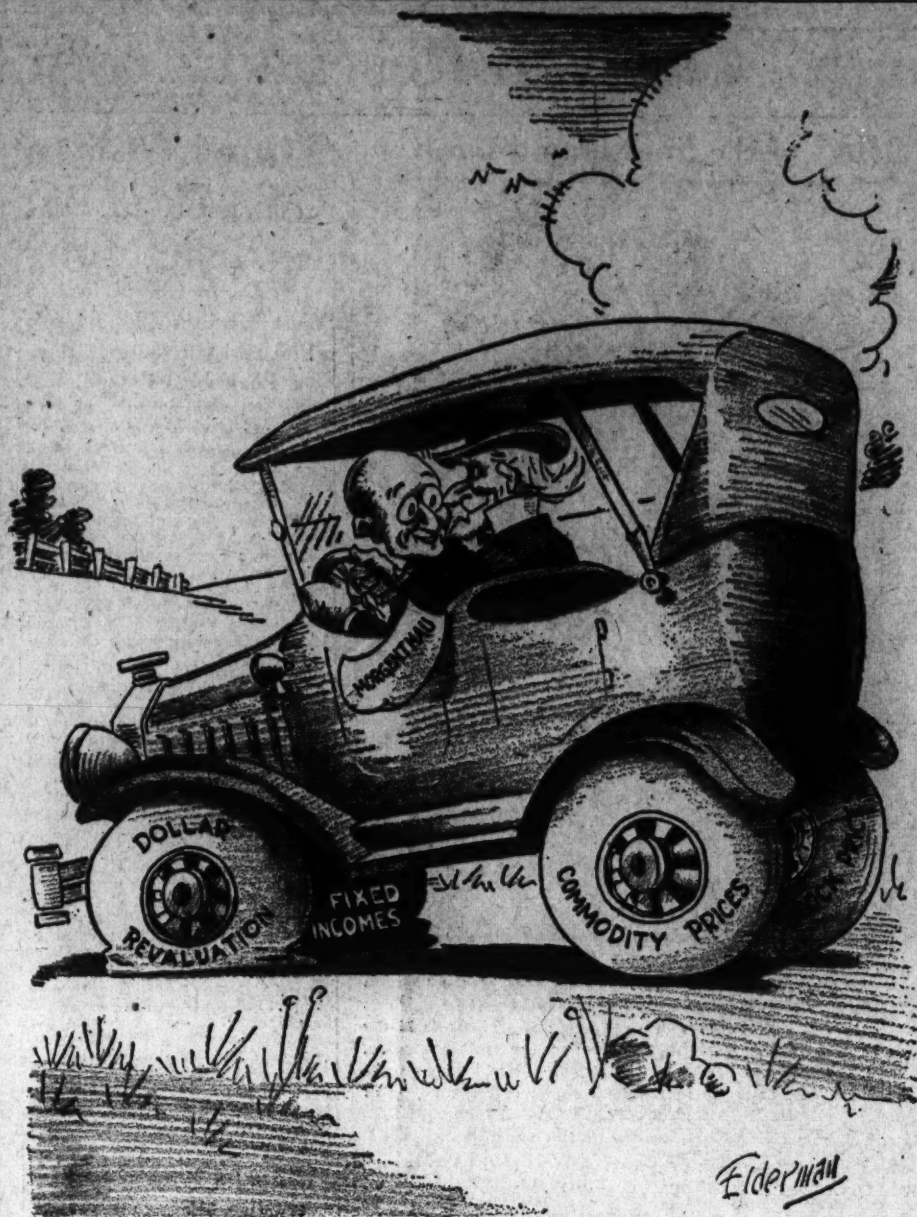

JAMES BRYCE, former British Ambassador to America, was elevated to the peerage.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

WOODROW WILSON died at 11:15 o'clock in the morning. "I'm ready," he said to Dr. Grayson some time before he died. "It's better that I should go."

ATLEE POMERENE was named Government counsel to prosecute in the oil scandal. KING GEORGE approved the naming of eight Laborites to audit the royal household expenditures. Tories were horrified; the King was jovial about it.

S. GLENN YOUNG, rider for the Ku Klux Klan, and his armed possemen paraded 128 persons taken in raids in Herrin, Ill., through the streets.

Letters to the Editor

On Maldistribution of Wealth.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Reference is made to an interesting letter by Mr. Dwyer in a recent issue of the Post wherein he intimated that Wall Street and Father Coughlin are now in agreement on the "money" question. He also stated in effect that Dr. Sprague is not such a good explainer as the priest. That appears somewhat strange in view of the subject and Dr. Sprague's training and experience.

Of course, it may not be applicable in Mr. Dwyer's case, but the thought occurred to me that entertainment is too often mistaken for instruction; that an individual is frequently considered a good teacher by his class or audience when, as a matter of fact, he is only eloquent, a good phrase maker or skilled in the art of making the "worse appear the better reason."

"We have no famine of money—we have maldistribution of wealth. . . . Making two dollars out of one dollar will not cure the maldistribution of wealth."

It should be our first and constant aim to remedy our distributive system. The "money" problem would take care of itself. Tinkering with the dollar, the ostensible purpose of which is to restore prosperity, the prosperity we had under the gold standard, is certainly no remedy, but, on the contrary, delays or prevents a cure for our defective distributive system, the underlying cause of our National ills. DOC.

"Managing" the Dollar.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The mercury in a barometer may be "managed" by dousing it with hot water when the temperature is zero or encasing it in ice when it reaches blood-heat. However, we will all agree that actual atmospheric conditions will not be altered by this procedure. And, when subjected to scrutiny, the effort of the Administration to "manage" the dollar in order to improve the industrial atmosphere, is about as ridiculous as would be the attempt to change the weather by "manipulating" the mercury. That this simple truth has not been recognized does not speak well for the "brain (?) trust."

As a matter of fact, the notion that the dollar influences industrial conditions is as illogical as the idea that "the tail wags the dog" or the mercury creates atmosphere. Money, like mercury, can not be successfully "managed," for the reason it is daily and hourly subjected to changing industrial and social states. A single drought may cause a shortage of grain, thereby forcing prices upward, just as drought and heat will make the mercury rise. The deluded members of "brain (?) trust" will doubtless continue their efforts to "manage" the monetary currency until at some later date the absurdity of the whole scheme will become apparent.

E. K. GOLDSBOROUGH.

Bilbo's Job.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Theodore Bilbo and his political henchmen, like a swarm of locusts, have been the plague of Mississippi for the last 24 years. It is a disgrace for him to hold the job that he has at $6,000 a year, but if he returns to Mississippi from his St. Helena retreat for any sort of a political tussle he is going to wake up and find himself pasted flatter than any sheet of paper he ever saw. He had better keep on playing kindergarten while he can.

ECONOMIST, OF MISS.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications should be signed with the writer's name. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters should be limited to 300 words.

The 15 Per Cent Cut.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every time I read one of those crying letters that one of the poverty-stricken Government workers write to the newspapers, due to the 15 per cent cut they have received in salary, I am reminded of a small, spoiled child that has been used to getting an ice cream cone every day and suddenly is refused that luxury.

If these crying, babbling, narrow-minded few could only get a picture of thousands upon thousands of cases in these United States . . . a picture of people who are struggling and striving for a mere nothing . . . placing their trust and faith in our peerless leader, and content to leave all to him, there is no doubt but what it would make bigger men and women of them. I believe I would look elsewhere for employment and keep my mouth shut. Anyone resigning at once will be so kind as to notify me immediately. I'm sure.

UNEMPLOYED.

For "Free" Currency.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a Nation we can never hope to attain a degree of social and economic well-being unless a complete and permanent change is effected in the issuing and control of our money.

It is not more currency that is needed, but more bank deposits—money subject to check—in other words a circulating medium for the use of the people free and not to be manipulated and controlled by any one individual or group for private gain. We have enough of that in the past and we look for a new deal in our monetary system which will allow the people the use of legitimate service earned—money free, a privilege which was taken from them mainly in the passage of the National bank act of 1871.

Nationalize the banks and operate them under Government control on a nonprofit basis; free the currency to the needy, aged and incapacitated in sufficient sums to insure a moderately comfortable existence in homes of their own and you will create a market's worth as you never had before. Where will the money come from for this purpose? The money will come from the same inexhaustible sources from which the money racketeers got the money with which they enslaved the world.

We can not go on creating more and more debt without foundering altogether as a Nation and it is my opinion that President Roosevelt will eventually arrive at the decision that our money must be made free again. The bankers will be arrayed on one side and the people on the other.

JOSEPH BRENNAN.

Starling Pie?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I offer a solution of the starling nuisance? Let men out of employment (there are plenty hanging around the missions here) trap the birds and apply them for food. The birds live on the fat of the land and should make good eating.

R. J. P.

Woman Movement Pioneers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A short time ago I visited the marble group of pioneers of the woman movement located in the Capitol. As I stood there, a guide approached with a number of sight-seers. He paused scarcely a moment or two, said something about "suffragists," which is altogether too narrow a term for these far-visions women, mentioned their names, referred to Elizabeth Cady Stanton's "permanent wave, right up to date," and was gone.

The incident saddened me as I pondered on the significance of the memorial before me. Three "Mothers in Israel," immortalized in stone by Adelaide Johnson, chucked into a corner in the "basement" of the Capitol with an ugly board partition near by adding to the disgrace of the scene.

Oh, women, the indignity of it! How is it that such a condition is permitted to exist? Next to our country's flag, we should reverence this symbol beyond all others in National life, for its stands alone—the only expression of its kind in existence of the long struggle of these pioneers to lay the foundation for whatever measure of justice women have today in this and other lands. The birthdays of "The Invisibles Three" come and go with seldom a wreath or a flower to show that they are remembered. I have never seen them at their February meetings. Let us learn a lesson from them, who so loyally honor their heroes.

February 15 is the 144th anniversary of the birth of Susan B. Anthony. Will the women's clubs of the country recognize the day and honor it by their February meetings? The great leader of the woman movement, who for over half a century kept the woes of women close to her heart? Will they do something about the "Woman's shame"? When will the children of the Nation be as familiar with the name of America's greatest woman as they are with the names of Washington and Lincoln? Let us march on in the path marked out by the pioneers and finish the work they so nobly advanced.

ROSE ARNOLD POWELL.

Unbiased Veteran Hearings.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of the biggest sources of scandal in veteran affairs in the past years and one of the things which brought tragedy to the veterans as a whole was the fact that large numbers of Veterans Administration officials and employees, especially professional men, were drawing large pay as employees. In the excitement nearly every one overlooked the sordid practice of having such persons pass upon the claims of veterans seeking compensation and other benefits.

To remedy this practice, a wise representative put through a law providing that those drawing benefits could not pass upon the claims of others seeking the same benefits.

Upon this sane and just provision an assault is now being energetically made. The Veterans' Administration proposes to authorize renouncement of pension temporarily and thereby the plain letter of the law. This law intended to cover employees who were entitled to pensions, whether they be drawn now or later.

Every veteran who has the welfare of his fellow veterans at heart will vigorously oppose this attempt by the Government to defeat its own laws. It is not the veteran's fault that the Veterans' Administration's higher positions are so stuffed with beneficiaries that it can not function. This situation did not come up at the top of the house, and there sees the dead man standing and quietly gazing at her, my blood ran cold. Later when the government is out for the afternoon and sees the dead woman walking up and down the other side of a lake, my blood turned to ice water.

I finished the book at midnight. Then I had a problem. I did not dare go downstairs and put on the hall light. But being a Yankee I did not like to have the gas turned off all night. Then I said to someone who stood at the head of the stairs, "Don't you leave me!" Don't you take your eyes off me!" Then I went down, extinguished the hall light, and ran upstairs as if the devil and all his angels were after me.

THOMAS L. MADDINS.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

A LONG with Relief Administrator Hopkins' plan, announced yesterday, of supporting 100,000 boys and girls in the various universities this winter, the question arises as to whether it would not be better for the Government to set up a huge school to train youths in the ways of making a living under the New Deal. The need for such a school is felt until our present institutions of learning are able to revise their courses would seem to be indispensable.

Our conceptions of pursuing a career under the system of rugged individualism have become outmoded. Emphasis in the training of youth in the future must be on how to get some thing from the Government. It would seem to make no particular difference what sort of a career is pursued, whether that of the wage earner, business man or farmer, the prime requisite will be a knowledge of how to get something from the Government.

In agriculture, for example, nothing seems more ridiculous than the courses now presented by the agricultural schools on how to raise crops and stock officially. What the embryo farmer must be taught from now on is how to turn under his wheat, his cotton and his pigs, and how to get money from the Government for doing it.

And surely it would seem that we must discard our old theories of getting along in business. An aptitude for or a training in buying and selling, seems to me to be much less important now than the ability to get along with a deputy administrator. What good does it do one, for instance, to be highly trained in the business of selling merchandise and desirous of going into the merchandising business if the code authorities decide that there is no more room in the merchandising field?

Only a few days ago a man down South highly trained in the textile industry got it into his head that he could sell more of his textile products than he was turning out. He asked the NRA to let him install some additional looms, and was told, in effect, that he was crazy, that he just thought he could sell more textile goods. What that man needed obviously, was not so much training in the textile industry as in the ability to get things from Washington.

We have long had a small school on how to get things from the Government, of course the school of lobbying, but lobbying has not been one of our major pursuits. Certainly it is the school that should be encouraged now; certainly it is the school that the youngsters should be encouraged to attend, not those out-moded colleges and universities and schools of technology. If Mr. Hopkins doesn't want to set up a government school, maybe it would be a good idea to endow the existing school on lobbying.

The boy should be taught primarily how to make sure that he is with the winning political party, or if he grows up to form a partnership, that one partner be closely identified with each party. This is what has long been the school in the lobbying school as working both sides of the street. As the parents of the country come more and more to realize the need of lobbying instruction for their children many of them will, of course, want to send their sons to private lobbying schools. In this case, they must make sure to send them to a place where they are likely to form the acquaintance of future deputy administrators.

These youngsters are destined to play a most important part in our lives. This, I think, should be particularly stressed in the co-ed lobbying schools. I assume that even under the New Deal girls will continue to get married and help their husbands advance their careers.

This being true I can't imagine any instruction in a co-ed school more important than on how to be charming to a deputy administrator. Maybe they should have a dummy of a deputy administrator in every girls' school for the girls to practice on.

The Greatest Ghost Story.

It was in the year 1898 that Henry James produced a book called "The Two Magics" and the two stories in it are named respectively "Covering End" and "The Turn of the Screw." Well, I began to read "The Turn of the Screw." I opened the book with a serene assurance of quiet, passive enjoyment. And, as a matter of fact, there is no machinery of melodrama. There is no horror of great darkness, or midnight bells, or strange shrieks. But when the governess starts to take a pleasant afternoon stroll, and look up at the top of the house, and there sees the dead man standing and quietly gazing at her, my blood ran cold. Later when the governess is out for the afternoon and sees the dead woman walking up and down the other side of a lake, my blood turned to ice water.

Washington's Gingerbread Comes to Town

Ready Mix Follows Famous
Recipe Used by Mother of First President.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Years and years ago, when George Washington was a little boy, he was very fond of gingerbread—so the story goes. And, of course, his mother, who was very fond of George, used to make it for him while he stood by, gazing at the process and hungry enough to wield a hatchet.

This same recipe used by Martha Ball

Washington, the copyrighted property of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was granted to a large manufacturing concern which is putting out a gingerbread mix all ready for the baking. It is sold with a bona fide guarantee that means if you don't like it, back comes your money!

The famous gingerbread recipe has come down to us rich with legend. There's a story told of Lafayette's visit to Fredericksburg in 1784 and how his delight with the spicy gingerbread Mary Washington served him inspired his oft-quoted remark about her: "I have met the only Roman matron of my day!"

The mix contains all the ingredients of a home kitchen recipe—flour, sugar, molasses, egg, vegetable, shortening, spices, baking powder, milk, soda and salt. All we have to do is add a cup of water and bake.

It may be served hot, cold, buttered, or with whipped cream, and is delicious with hot sauce, vanilla, orange, chocolate, with melted cheese sauce, stewed fruit, or as cake frosted with orange, white, or chocolate. Back in the so-called "good old days" it was served with powdered sugar to good boys and girls, and without to the bad ones.

Letters from housewives all over the country suggest serving it with lemon cream filling between layers, with ice cream, as banana short-cakes—the gingerbread split and sliced bananas put between layers and on top a liberal splash of whipped cream with coconut sprinkled on top; as marshmallow "pudding"—the gingerbread split, and marshmallows put between layers and the whole put in the oven until the marshmallows melt. One unique method suggested: Split while hot. Place a mixture of chopped dates, cream cheese and nuts between with a bit of orange marmalade.

The mix may also be used for making cup cakes, muffins, waffles and cookies.

Hard labor in the kitchen may be done away with by means of a simple rubber spatula. It doesn't look like it could come into a home and actually alleviate chores. But it can! For cleaning pots and pans, for actually scraping, it's excellent.

For removing the last coating of debris from dishes, and for keeping windows spotlessly shiny there are few household tools which are comparable. And only priced at 15 cents.

The real hostess is she who keeps her pantry stocked with tempting edibles of marked variety. When unexpected guests arrive, the luxury of simply ordering from one's own storeroom brings a feeling of real satisfaction.

A downtown food shop specializes in unique foods. And, let us add, considerably prices them within reach of the modest pocket-book. The shelves yield a myriad of suggestions. We noticed prominently placed among the other edibles a large jar of ox tongue, ready prepared to serve with or in a salad. It also comes in slices appropriate for a cold meat platter.

The kitchenware department of a large downtown store has some new rice balls. They look like two circular strainers fitted together to form a sphere.

Raw rice is washed under a faucet, immersed in rapidly boiling water and cooked for 15 to 17 minutes.

A basic rice recipe, commonly known as Yankee rice pudding, may be varied to result in Scandinavian, Oriental and Southern puddings.

For the Yankee rice pudding use 1/4 to 1/2 cup raw rice, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/4 to 1/2 cup sugar, 4 cups milk, grated rind of 1/2 lemon.

Cook the rice in the rice ball, then mix in the rest of the ingredients and pour into a buttered casserole. Set in a pan of hot water and bake three hours in a very slow oven. Stir the pudding every 15 minutes for the first hour to prevent rice from settling. Serve either hot or cold with this cream.

Scandinavian: Omit lemon rind and add 1 stick of cinnamon and 1/2 cup of seedless raisins. Serve hot with cream and sugar and sprinkling of ground cinnamon.

Chocolate: Omit lemon rind and add 1 1/2 ounces of chocolate. Flavor with vanilla.

Maple: Omit sugar and lemon peel. Add 1/2 cup brown sugar. Flavor with maple and serve with whipped cream and nuts.

Oriental: Omit lemon peel and add 1 cup of dates. When pudding is done cover top with marshmallows and place in moderate oven to melt and brown.

Southern: Add 2 eggs and 1/4 cup raisins. About one-half hour before pudding is done carefully fold in beaten eggs and continue cooking until custard sets and is golden brown on top.

Pound Cake Made Favorite By Season and Popular Taste

By Ann Barrett.

Christmas fruit cakes were grand. Layer cakes piled high with icing are delicious, too. But variety is the spice of eating. And now that it's getting on toward spring, when the cost of butter and eggs is down, it's high time for that plain but elegant loaf cake, preferred by Representative Morgan G. Sanders, of Texas. Good, old-fashioned pound cake—yellow as gold, rich as butter, fine-grained from vigorous beating and framed with the sort of soft, thick crust no other cake can boast.

Not too sweet, and grand for out-of-hand eating, it's the best cake I know for slicing up to serve with a glass of fruit juice or wine, when friends drop in at an evening. Good with 4 o'clock tea and with mid-night coffee, too. And obliges still further by staying moist at least a week.

What Goes Into It.

Made the old-fashioned way, this cake contains no baking powder or liquid. Ovarian's rule for it was 1 pound each of butter, sugar, eggs and flour, plus a little flavoring. But that makes a pretty large cake for nowadays. Divide this recipe by two, change it into cup and unit measurements, and you get this: 1 level cup butter, cut solid, 1 1/4 cups sugar (minus 1 tablespoon), 5 eggs, 2 cups sifted pastry flour. For flavoring (you don't want much, because the butter flavor mustn't be hidden), use 1/4 teaspoon of mace or nutmeg—either alone or with 1 1/2 tablespoons orange juice, sherry or brandy.

How It's Made.

The way to proceed with these ingredients is as follows: Put butter in bowl and work with spoon till very soft and light. Add sugar little by little, beating constantly with spoon. Then add yolks of eggs (first beaten until lemon colored) and beat the whole mixture again. Next add the egg whites (first beaten stiff). Then the flour and flavoring. Next take the weight off your feet and enter it in your good right arm by beating yourself with the mixing bowl and beating that cake at least 3 whole minutes.

After this, as a final step, turn the mixture into a loaf pan (first buttered, next lined with plain white paper, then buttered again). (Pan should be about 8 by 4 by 3 inches.) Bake about 50 minutes as near the center of the oven as possible, keeping the heat steadily at 300 degrees F. Lift the cake out of the tin, let it cool in its paper wrapping, then store it away. The paper will help to keep it in that gorgeous state which will make your friends call you blessed when they eat it.

Pound Cake Variations.

Many people would consider it a culinary crime to add a single thing to this cake. Others like 2-3 cup of currants or raisins in it. Or 1/2 cup grated coconut. To make this pound cake recipe into a famous variation called Dundee cake (really a light fruit cake) do this: Use 2 tablespoons orange juice for flavoring and add 1/4 cup each very finely chopped blanched almonds and citron and 1-3 cup each raisins and currants. Sprinkle the top liberally (before baking) with blanched, split almonds. And bake in an oval loaf tin—if you have one.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

The agency or quality in good air which makes it wholesome and that in bad air which makes it harmful still eludes us. It is said that we can do without food for three weeks, without water for three days, and without air for 3 minutes. The inference is that water is seven times as important as food for the human system, and air ranks higher than water. The figures are not right, as a matter of fact, but that is of secondary importance, since the statement is used only for the purpose of making the point.

We need the oxygen air contains in order to burn chemicals that must be burned. We must breathe for other reasons beyond the need for oxygen. In fact, under every-day practical conditions, air as a source of supply for oxygen calls for no thought. The supply is far beyond the need. Therefore, oxygen content is not the important element that makes air wholesome or not.

Used air is rich in carbonic acid. For a long time we thought it was this chemical that made bad air unwholesome. That theory was abandoned early. Carbon monoxide is rarely present in air in unwholesome proportions. The widespread quality now under discussion is not carbon monoxide.

A theory widely accepted a generation ago was that bad air was unwholesome because it contained "crowd poison." The expired air contains many gaseous, excretory products, from onion flavor to halitosis ethers. It is the presence of such excretory products that makes bad air unwholesome. That theory was popular a quarter of a century ago.

Then came the theory that bad air was unwholesome and good air was healthful because of what is loosely called "air conditions." By this is meant because its temperature and its content of water and freedom from dust, and its rate and force of movement made for comfort, it was called wholesome or otherwise. This explanation still stands. It is the best we have. But it does not entirely satisfy us. We keep casting about for something new that we feel is needed to complete the picture.

One that makes a strong appeal is a certain electrical condition of the air that we have in mind when we say the air is ionized. This theory has much to support it. It is in line with many of the newly discovered and now accepted qualities and capacities of electricity. It is being given a moderately extensive practical trial. So far as the demonstrations have gone, ionization is not making good. The ability of ionized air to improve metabolism, to modify breathing, heart beat, pulse rate, and the action of organs that can be well observed has not shown that ionization has much beneficial effect. The experiments are still at work on the problem, approaching it in other ways, from other angles, and by other methods. There is still hope that the cause of goodness and badness of air can be found in its electrical condition, but so far we have nothing more substantial than hopes.

Walters Art Gallery Is Hailed As Finest Private Collection

Amazing Treasures Found in Museum Presented to Baltimore; Cuneiform Tablets Dating Back to 2230 B. C. Interest Savants; Cataloguing Will Take Many Years.

Baltimore, Feb. 2 (AP).—The Walters Art Gallery, opening its doors to the public today for the first time, is described by Francis Henry Taylor, director of the Worcester (Mass.) Art Museum as "a treasure house—the greatest rounded-out private art collection in the United States and second to none in Europe."

"For collections of its kind—private—it has the widest range in the world," he continued, following a preview of the gallery which was bequeathed to the city by the late Henry Walters. Taylor will head a committee of experts who will study the contents of the massive stone building under the shadow of Washington Monument on Mount Vernon place.

"It is indescribable in its scope and inexhaustible in material for students in every field," Taylor said. "It will take at least 24 years before everything in the gallery can be studied, compiled, catalogued and properly shown."

Ancient Tablet Found.
"It is a tremendous task for any persons who undertake it. I know of only two private collections comparable with it—the Lichtenstein in Vienna and another collection in London."

Prof. Emil Forrer, of Strasbourg, France, a guest of Robert Garrett, of Baltimore, and a visitor at the gallery, made a discovery in the collection of cuneiform writing.

One tablet, dating back, he said, to 2230 B. C., was the largest ever brought to his attention, and he believed it to be the largest in any collection. It is an account of thousands of soldiers or workmen and a history of the brother of the King of Ur. He said he knew of no other tablet bearing such a record.

Dating From Babylon.
Prof. Forrer also was elated at finding in a gallery a block of cuneiform writing from the city of Lagash and relating to the King of Babylon, the professor dating the tablet to 2300 B. C.

B. Howell Griswold, chairman of the board of trustees, in talking to municipal officials and guests at the preview, explained that Walters inherited many of the art treasures from his father and extended his parent's collection. Instead of allowing the collection at his death to be "dissipated," he willed it to the city.

Griswold said there are thousands of pieces of art in drawers in exhibition cases that can not be shown, because of lack of space. There also are 214 boxes of art in the basement that can not be displayed at present.

Some of the Masterpieces.
In the Francis Scott Key room is the original manuscript of "The Star-Spangled Banner," written on the back of a letter by Key while aboard a vessel during the bombardment of Fort Mifflin in the War of 1812.

Some of the masterpieces in the south gallery are Delacroix's "Jesus on the Sea of Galilee," Delaroche's "The Hemicycle," Money's "Springtime," Constable's "Old Mill," Rousseau's "Winter Solitude," Millet's "Shepherd" and "The Potato Harvest," Alma-Tadema's "Triumph of Titus," Gappagh's "A Roman Emperor—Claudius," Leys' "Edict of Charles V," Reynolds' "The Strawberry Girl," Bretton's "Return From the Fields," Gerome's "Duel After the Masquerade" and

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

If February 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 10:15 a. m. from 2:45 to 3:45 p. m. and from 8 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 4 to 5 p. m. and from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m.

If you were born on February 3 you have an unusually alert and capable business brain. It would be well for you to guard against your developing an exaggerated sense of your own importance. Remember, an egotist has always more enemies than friends. You have the happy faculty of knowing just when and when not to talk in a business discussion and this will prove of great value in your business life. Be very careful in getting on or off of any form of vehicle.

The child born on February 3 will develop into a splendid specimen of humanity. It will have a surprising amount of vitality. As it grows older it will display a keen interest in musical instruments and will have an ear attuned for harmony. Music will play an important part in this child's life. It is advisable not to ever use harsh methods in correcting its childish faults. You can accomplish just as much more, by kindly methods.

The woman born on February 3 possesses a quiet simplicity of manner that commands, not only respect but attention. In a very unobtrusive manner she can accomplish more, in a given space of time, than can many with noise and clatter. If your natal day is February 3, the sooner you marry and have a home of your own, the better. Motherhood is essential to your happiness. Remember no home is really complete without children.

The man born on February 3 is inherently cautious. He is slow to decide on any fixed policy, but once he has made up his mind, it is very hard to convert him to any other. Honest himself, he is of a very trustful nature, but lie to him just once, and nothing will restore his faith in the liar. If born on February 3, you have the highest regard for women, and your life will have an empty void if you fail to marry.

People born on February 3 are of the type and nature that has produced some of the world's greatest soldiers, poets, journalists and scientists. They have the souls of philosophers, the intelligence of intellectuals, and the patience of artisans. They are discriminating in their taste not only for the ordinary things in daily life, but in art and literature. If you were born on February 3, you should carefully analyze yourself, and in this manner determine the vocation for which you feel best qualified, and, regardless of the sacrifice involved, take it up.

Snowbound Society Spends Day Indoors

Large Luncheons Centers of Activity While Wintry Spell Grips Capital; Mrs. Garner Ranking Guest At Party Given by Mrs. Clarke.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society members yesterday found themselves confined to their homes by the snow. Even the inveterate walkers, of which there are many in Washington, did not venture far, but a number of large luncheons which were the outstanding social events of the day, took place as planned, the guests lingering longer than usual enjoying pleasant conversation, charming rooms and warm fires.

Mrs. John Nance Garner, wife of the Vice President, was the ranking guest at a luncheon given by Mrs. Bennett Champ Clarke, wife of the Senator from Missouri, in honor of her mother, Mrs. Wilbur W. Marsh, of Waterloo, Iowa.

The drawing room of the Clarke home in Spring Valley was decorated with pink roses, and in the dining room an effective floral note was the huge blue bowl filled with ivory calla lilies.

The other guests were Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce; Mrs. Nathan Bachman, Mrs. J. L. Milligan, Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross, Director of the Mint; Mrs. Claude R. Porter, Mrs. Boutin, Mrs. Harry B. Hawes, Mrs. Arthur Mullen, Miss Barbara Dolan, Mrs. George Whitecotton, Mrs. Camden McAtee, Mrs. James R. Mana, Mrs. Hugh S. Cummins, Mrs. John C. Breckenridge, Mrs. Harry W. Blair, Mrs. Chappell, Mrs. Jewell Swafford, Mrs. Ann Connally, Miss Eleanor Connally, Mrs. Robert Baker, Mrs. Tom K. Smith, Miss Elizabeth Poe, Mrs. Vylla Poe Wilson, Mrs. George Routh, Mrs. Beth Hafner, and Mrs. Carl Ristine.

The Minister of Persia and Mme. Djalal entertained at luncheon yesterday in honor of the newly appointed United States Minister to Persia and Mrs. William H. Hornbrook and their daughter, Miss Frances Hornbrook.

The guests were Senator William H. King, the Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom, the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Veverka, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. Bianchi, Mrs. Hart, wife of the former United States Minister to Persia, the Charge d'Affaires of Egypt, Nicholas Khalil Bey; Mme. Sokolowska, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy; Mme. Entegam, wife of the Secretary of the Persian Legation in Geneva; Mr. Wallace S. Murray, Chief of the Near Eastern Division of the State Department, and Mr. Henry Villard.

Mr. and Mrs. Hornbrook and their daughter, who are visiting the former's brother, Mr. E. J. Hornbrook, while in Washington from their home in Salt Lake City, will sail on Tuesday for the Near East, and will go to Teheran, Persia.

(Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Persian Legation in Geneva, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given yesterday by Mrs. William H. Standley, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, in her home at the Naval Observatory. Covers were laid for 16 guests.)

Mrs. William Howard Taft was the guest of honor at a luncheon yesterday given by Mrs. William F. Dennis in her home on R street. Following the luncheon Mrs. Charles Nelson Riker, of Harrodsburg, Ky., daughter of the hostess, sang several groups of songs, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. James McClure, of Kentucky.

Preserving Re-Entries.

Mr. J. H. Vicars, of Boissevain, Manitoba, Canada, relates that: when the hand shown below was dealt in the course of a rubber game, he, seated North, felt that the 1,000 point deficit in his and his partner's score could easily be closed up when his partner opened the bidding with a call of one diamond. In fact, inasmuch as North and South were vulnerable, he thought they might not only eliminate the minus score but accumulate enough points on the plus side to give them a surplus with which to buy lunch. Strangely enough, as he recounts, the old law, "To him that hath shall be given," stepped in, and after West opened the heart 5, on which the Ten was finessed and lost to the King, the Ace of diamonds was removed from the North hand, and subsequently partner went down 2 tricks, adding, of course, to the deficit rather than replacing it with a surplus.

South, Dealer.

4♠	Pass	5NT	Pass
6NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Mr. Vicars asks me to comment on the bidding, remarking in doing so that he thinks he has commented sufficiently on the play. Undoubtedly, South's bidding was over-ambitious. North and South are vulnerable. South has a bare 3 honor-tricks and a suit of only four cards in length. His second bid of two no-trump over his partner's response of one heart is, therefore, entirely too strong and his subsequent raise of three spades to four spades is also over-ambitious. Mr. Vicars himself might well have been content to let the bidding rest at four spades but the Slam urge is strong in all of us and perhaps the contract was not as bad as one as the result makes it appear.

Let us examine the play. The heart 5 is probably as good an opening as any from the standpoint of the West player and naturally the finesse must be taken. When East wins this trick with the King, the return of the diamond is as good as any play he has. Now, certainly, South should pause and take stock of his resources. He has

Shenandoah Crafts Will Be Catalogued

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 2 (Sp.).—The Russell Sage Foundation, of New York City, is planning to catalogue the native handicrafts of the Shenandoah Valley, together with the persons who, without any special training, have become adept in such work.

Superintendent of Schools C. V. Shenandoah has received a letter from Allen Eaton, of the foundation, asking him to help organize this work. Mr. Eaton said the handicrafts, together with their participants, would be described in a treatise he is compiling on "Handicrafts of the Southern Highlands."

Such handicrafts as basketry, weaving, chair making, quilting, furniture, woodworking, pottery, making, rug weaving, making of musical instruments and production of toys, dolls and brooms are to be catalogued.

four tricks in spades, a maximum of two tricks in hearts and three top-card tricks in diamonds. There is no chance to develop a fourth diamond trick, so if South is to make his contract it must depend upon being able to play the club suit so that he loses no tricks in that suit. If he can make four clubs, three diamonds, four spades and the Ace of hearts—the success of the contract is assured, without the necessity of worrying about the heart finesse.

Therefore, having won the second trick in Dummy with the Ace, South should lead from the North hand the club 9. He should upon this play the King from his own hand and return the suit, finessing the Knave, and when both of his opponents follow, it should be apparent that the club suit must break. By following this line of play Mr. Vicars' partner, instead of going down 2 tricks, would have the satisfaction of making a rather ambitiously bid Slam, as he could now run his clubs and spades with safety, winding up in his own hand with the 8 of clubs and thus making four club tricks, three diamonds, four spades and the Ace of hearts of a fulfilled instead of defeated contract.

Music to Carry Greetings From U. S. to Russia

Westminster Choir's Sponsor Tells of Good Will Trip Noted Group Plans.

Through the medium of music, America's greetings will be carried to Soviet Russia.

Mrs. H. E. Talbot, of New York City, sponsor of the Westminster Choir, spoke enthusiastically yesterday of the pending tour which the choir is planning.

"Through the beautiful American melodies, secular songs, Indian folk-lore, Negro spirituals and mountain ballads, we will tell the Russian people much about our country," she said. "They may understand the words, but they will feel the music. It is the one language of all people, and all ages."

First of Cultural Envoys.

"Our purpose is to engender a friendly feeling among Russian citizens toward the people of the United States. We feel that an expression of amity could not be expressed more eloquently than by means of melody."

Mrs. Talbot said in her Hotel Mayflower room surrounded by letters from prominent persons congratulating her on the tour. Picking out several at random, she remarked:

"Here is one from Ruth Bryan Owen wishing us the best. This one is from Walter Damrosch, the great Olin Downs, musical critic of the New York Times, and one from Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Here's one from Pierre Key, editor and publisher of the Musical Digest. There are ever and ever so many, and all of them express the hope that our trip will bear the splendid results we hope for. And," she added proudly, "we will be the first American group to go in company to Soviet Russia."

Soviet Society's Invitation.

The invitation to the choir to sing in Moscow was extended by the Soviet-sponsored Moscow Philharmonic Society. Six concerts will be given on the Russian tour. William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to Russia, acting as patron.

"During the tour abroad, the choir will sing in virtually every European country."

Mrs. Talbot told of how she became interested in the choir ten years ago when it was singing at Dayton, Ohio. She heard it at the suggestion of Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, former president of the Federation of Music Clubs.

"I had always loved music," she said, "and when I heard the choir sing I realized it was the most beautiful choral singing I had ever heard."

Tribute to Dr. Williamson.

A desire to help Dr. John Finley Williamson, the director, in achieving his ideal for the choir caused Mrs. Talbot to devote her time and resources to the choir undertaking.

"Dr. Williamson never wearied of working toward his goal," she said, "and I felt I wanted to do all I could to help him. Now we have 40 young singers in the choir, all serious-minded about their work. Not one of the choir members drinks or smokes. The choir is one of the most remarkable organizations in the country."

"It will be a wonderful instrument with which to work an interchange of artistic achievement—our secondary purpose in Russia."

"Ifly America is to become a singing Nation," she said, "it must be accomplished through advancement of choral music."

Many Handsome New Ideas in Chinaware Accompany the Fashion for Table Elegance

By Amos Parrish.

New York, Feb. 3.—You're hearing a lot about the fashion for real old-time elegance in clothes. But it has nothing on the elegance of table attire. For it's the fashion to entertain to dine (and wine your friends royally with the "company" linen, silverware, glassware and china making the table look its shining best.

And special china for special times is becoming almost as important as correct stemware for the newly returned wines.

Special entree and hors d'oeuvre plates are demanded by many fashionable hostesses. They take a gay and often amusing air with their quaint French scenes and mottoes (one is sketched at the top) or with scenes from Dickens' tales. Some of the newest have toasts of various countries written on them, such as Cheerio, Salute, Prost, a la Votre and Here's How.

Salad plates in a different pattern from the rest of the service are another important fashion. Square shapes are particularly smart.

Some are all one color; some have the outer edge in one color with the center left white to show off a flower cluster. Some are in gay plaids.

Then there's the institution of after-dinner coffee which is growing apace. All sorts of new cups have been designed to hold it in period and modern effects.

Whether to choose china, porcelain or semi-porcelain (earthenware) is a question only you and your budget can decide. To many women china and porcelain are the only things worth investing their funds in. Yet many of these same women are now learning that much of the ware they had always considered porcelain is in reality earthenware.

For earthenware is not only the heavy "crocker" pieces you are accustomed to associate with that name.

Many historic plates of almost priceless worth were of this material. And many of their old designs are being copied with considerable exactitude on today's earthenware.

I Contemplate Cutting My Hair.

Gardens of U. S. Contrasted With Those of Japan

Editor Says Flower Raising Here Smacks of "Keeping Up With Joneses."

Americans go in for gardening as if it were an athletic contest. But the Japanese develop their gardens from the esthetic viewpoint and intend them to inspire peace and contemplation.

B. Y. Morrison made this comparison at the Congressional Club yesterday afternoon when he talked on Japanese gardens. He is head of the foreign plant introduction service in the Department of Agriculture and editor of the National Horticultural Magazine.

"The American people have developed their gardens from the agricultural standpoint," Mr. Morrison continued. "They are interested in the production of larger and better plants, rather than in the esthetic side of gardening."

"They can't get away from the old competitive spirit. If Mr. Brown is going to grow dahlias he is determined to grow larger dahlias than Mr. Jones next door. Mr. Jones is equally determined not only to grow bigger flowers than Mr. Brown, but also to win the blue ribbon at the flower show."

Mr. Morrison said that he did not recommend that we make our gardens Japanese.

"We are Americans, and we have developed the kind of gardens which are best suited to our natures and climates," he said. "What I do recommend is that we take those methods of Japanese gardening which are adaptable to our own gardens and use them to intensify their beauty."

Japanese Way Contrasted.

"The Japanese do not plant flowers just as one unit. Each flower is part of a pictorial whole, and must harmonize with the rest of the garden. For that reason the Japanese do not plant a great variety of flowers. They feel that a riot of color intrudes upon the contemplative life."

"The background of the Japanese garden is always green. They do not have a continuous procession of blooming flowers as we do. They strive for one or two effects during the year. The order of the flowers as they bloom in Japanese flower gardens is something like this: Plum, cherry, then peonies, wisteria and azalea together; later comes iris, and in August what they call the 'mums'—the chrysanthemums. In late autumn they have chrysanthemums and maples."

"It is a funny thing about chrysanthemums. The Japanese love them but they do not blend in with their gardens so they plant them off to themselves. Sometimes they will transplant one flower into their gardens while it is blooming, but after that they put it back."

Borglum Seeks To Install Cheer In Schoolrooms

Would Use CWA Funds to Decorate Walls With Inspiring Pictures.

The drab walls of desolate little country schoolhouses throughout the United States will soon be enlivened with pictures of golden-haired princesses, pumpkin coaches and magical bean stalks if Gutson Borglum, dynamic sculptor, is successful in his crusade for bringing beauty into the schoolroom.

Historical narratives, legends and folk-lore will be included in the paintings that are to be done in oil above the blackboards, providing Mr. Borglum can obtain CWA funds to carry out his project.

"The majority of schoolrooms are as barren, empty, colorless and soulless as a millionaire's stable," declared the sculptor yesterday afternoon as he outlined his plan in the lounge of the Willard Hotel.

"But they could be made interesting, delightful places if the cold, white, chalky walls above their blackboards were filled with colorful scenes from the tales of Aesop, Andersen and Grimm. Our own American folk tales would inspire many of the pictures."

Artists' Need of Help.

Mr. Borglum, who has been appointed chairman of the advisory board of the CWA committee in Texas, believes that Federal funds should benefit men and women who do creative work.

"Many of them need assistance just as much as the men in the breadlines," he said. "If my plan is adopted, these artists will decorate the schoolrooms, receiving their compensation from CWA allotments."

"I should like to start with the smallest, most desolate and unattractive schoolhouse in the whole United States, and when I have finished with it, every other community will beg me to do over its school," predicted the sculptor who is famous for his work on the Stone Mountain Memorial and for his heroic figure of Washington at Mount Rushmore.

Stimulus to Children.

"With fascinating pictures on the walls, the schoolrooms would become pleasant, happy places," he continued. "Children would be eager to get to them in the morning and would hate to leave them when classes were over. That, in itself, is enough to justify the paintings."

Mr. Borglum dismissed with a shrug those parents who do not believe that their children should be taught fairy tales.

"Every successful person has achieved his goal through his dreams and imagination. There is nothing that stimulates the imagination of a child more than fairy tales. My idea in putting fairy tales on the schoolroom walls is to bring beauty where there has been only ugliness and to spur the imaginations of the children. Remember that the people who are not capable of dreams are fit only to carry out the dreams of others with pencil and paper, bit of stone or cloth, or other laborer's materials."

Mme. Veverka Contributes By Paintings and Literature

Believes Every Diplomat's Mate Should Have Some Practical Interest in Culture; Has Made Portraits of Famous Persons and Translated Wilder's Masterpiece.

Not society in its narrower sense but society in the largest and best sense of the word is served by the brilliant women of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington. Each of them brings to this country the best in the culture and tradition of her own.

This is the twelfth article in a series written for the purpose of making these interesting women better known to the American public.

By Elizabeth Young.

The snobbery into which a narrow society sometimes degenerates is abhorrent to Mme. Veverka, the gifted, intellectual and democratic wife of the Minister of Czechoslovakia.

Moreover, she believes art is the highest expression of the human soul; that it is international in its message and brings nations together.

"And that," she said, "is why I think every diplomat and every diplomat's wife should have some practical interest in art. To this idea I try to pay a humble contribution in some small way by my own painting. It is so interesting to paint portraits of all nations and to discover at last that we are all human."

"I have always considered society not as an aim in itself, but only as a means of contact with human minds and as a means to appreciate more my home. I divide my activities between my family and art."

Lauds "Prophet-President."

"Society should be refreshing and enlightening, bringing people together in an effort to create a broad brotherhood of intellect and refined people. I abhor above all the snobbery into which sometimes a narrow society degenerates. Refinement excludes snobishness."

"Brought up in a political atmosphere at home, I developed a dislike for petty politics, but I served a genuine interest in political movements from a broad point of view."

"I follow with sympathy the noble efforts of our prophet-President. Of course I never mingle in actual politics, these I reserve for my husband, who is a born politician."

Mme. Veverka attributes her liberal ideas to the influence of her father, who was Julius Grogg, the great Czech statesman, publisher, progressive party leader and philanthropist. Her father's country place near Prague was the gathering place in her childhood of the nation's political, social and intellectual leaders. Today it is a national memorial to her father.

Czechs "European Americans."

In a castle belonging to her family, built near Carlsbad in the thirteenth century, she grew up. Here she was surrounded by the products of a distinctive ancient national culture.

"The thing that impressed us most on coming to America was the modern civilization. We have just the chance to drive around."

"Bad weather for a holiday," she remarked. "If you want to see the house, come to see me. Say that I gave you permission—Lady Louise."

She nodded and walked on. Pank looked after her for a moment thoughtfully, then he examined his watch again and started up. He drove steadily and at last came along the byways until he came back to the main road for Norwich. Here he continued on his way till he reached the outskirts of the place, and pulled up near the lane which led to the farm. He noted the time and smiled, took out his notebook and made an entry. It had taken him exactly three-quarters of an hour to drive from the lodge gates of Keynsham Hall to this little corner of the suburbs of Norwich in which he was interested.

That afternoon former Detective Pank seemed to develop an unusual vein of laziness. He sat about in the bar parlor of his hotel for several hours, talking amiably to the few visitors who came in, but his acquaintance with the young lady behind the bar, a portion of the evening passed in the same fashion and he retired early. The next morning he drove out to the small golf course, made friends with everyone connected with the place, borrowed an old-fashioned set of clubs, and greatly disturbed the local professional by very neatly beating him in a round. After lunch he took up his new acquaintance with the young lady behind the bar, a portion of the evening passed in the same fashion and he retired early.

He had several acquaintances now among the tradespeople, whose conversation seemed always to interest him. The following morning he spent in more profitable fashion. From 10 o'clock until nearly midday he studied the older architecture of Keynsham Hall and devoted himself to the study of the pictures. The butler, who took him round, a grave and silent man, handed him a manuscript catalogue and left him for the most part to his own devices. Pank's artfully concealed but almost desperate attempts to break through his taciturnity were never once rewarded.

"I've read about the shooting parties you have here, in the papers; seen pictures of the guests, too," he remarked, as they reached the last gallery.

"Very likely, sir," the man replied. "As I picture you thought, I can't remember that I have ever seen one in the illustrated papers. His lordship doesn't care for that sort of thing."

"I thought I saw one," Pank reflected. "Daily Sketch, I think it was. The time the home secretary was shooting here."

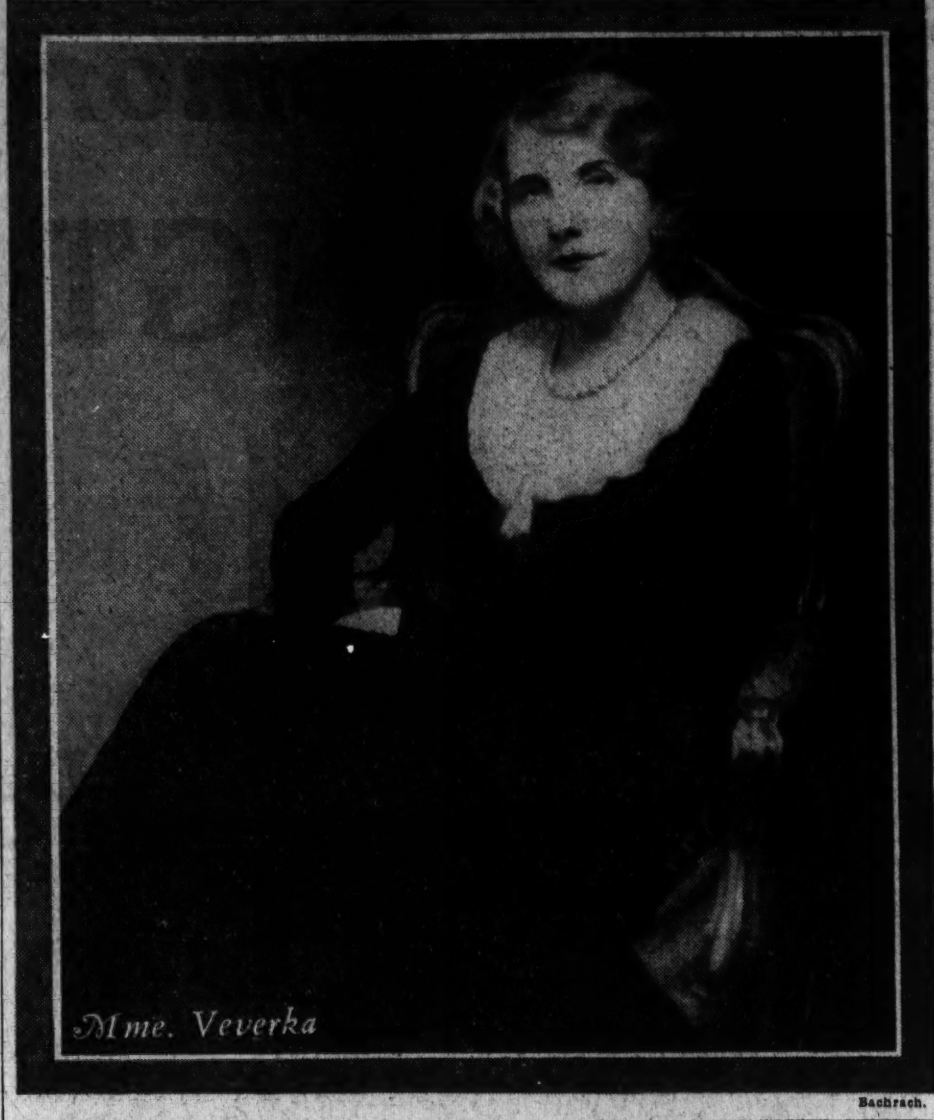

The butler strolled away to examine the frame of one of the pictures on which he fancied that he had discovered a fleck of dust. When he returned, it was with the polite but obvious desire to show his visitor out. He accepted a 10-shilling note with some apparent reluctance.

"Worth more than that," Pank said. "But things are not what they were. I dare say you hear that from a good many others besides me—dining-room talk and that sort of thing."

"I never listen to the conversation which goes on when I am serving," the man replied. "I have enough to do as a rule to perform my duties."

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

The Story Thus Far.

Convicted of murder, Cecil Brandt is to be hanged. Sir Humphrey Rossiter, England's young home secretary, can, if he so desires, intercede for him. He refuses to do so. The evening before the execution—while motoring to London in a hired car, following a visit to Lord Keynsham and his sister, Lady Louise, in Norfolk County—he is seized by four masked men, rushed to a mysterious house, placed on a gallows. "Promise," says the spokesman, "to grant Brandt a reprieve—or die."

Sir Humphrey will not promise. Informed, however, that Brandt's wife has new evidence to present, he finally does so. Released, he meets Katherine Brandt, hears her story, promises to grant a reprieve. The woman leaves. Sir Humphrey collapses. Hours later he recovers consciousness. Cecil Brandt has been hanged!

Scotland Yard goes to work. Whereupon Katherine Brandt and Sir Humphrey both disappear! * * * In Norfolk County, inspectors Smithers and Simpson search in vain for the house of mystery and the chauffeur who drove the hired car.

Young detective Pank, posing as a traveling salesman, has better luck. Having tracked his nephew's uncle, in Norwich, he learns from his pretty cousin, Amy, that a mystery stranger—"Tom Bowhill"—had occupied his room at the time of Sir Humphrey's adventure. He feels sure Bowhill is the much-wanted chauffeur.

While chatting with Amy at a bar, Pank sees a man enter—an exceedingly ugly man, wearing an old gray suit, splashed with paint. He addresses the man, chats with him, then, to Amy's horror, suggests that they meet again—at 10 o'clock that evening. * * * Luck seems, indeed, to be with Scotland Yard's young operative. He has, he believes, found a principal in the drama of the mysterious house, none other than the ruffian who was hired to be the hangman!

"Whisky and soda, eh?" his uncle commented, watching his nephew's drink being served. "So you really make money out of those heels, eh, Ernest? There must be a powerful lot of them used in the city."

"About four times as much as I did being a policeman," was the enthusiastic reply. "If the offer I have got today is accepted, I shan't want to do any more business here this visit."

"Ever think of marrying and settling down, eh?"

"That might be."

A friend and fellow bowler came in and was greeted by Mr. Pank with open arms. Their conversation became intimate and technical. Ernest Pank paid for the drinks and rose stealthily.

"I won't be long, Uncle," he said. "I've got an appointment with a customer at 10 o'clock. Leave the door open if you get home before me."

"We shall be home," his companion told him with emphasis, "at the same time. You'll leave where you are, and at closing time, I'll be to the same thing. We shall probably meet upon the doorstep. It will be as well."

Mr. Humble was waiting a little dejectedly in the still deserted sitting room. He greeted his generous friend with acclamation.

"So you're here again," he remarked.

"Looks like it," the newcomer assented. "Draw your chair up to the fire. Landlord, take the orders and don't forget yourself. Give it a name, Mr. Humble."

Mr. Humble elected to follow his host's example.

"You're a very free young fellow," he observed. "What's your business, if one might make so bold as to ask?"

The ex-detective drew a leather heel from his pocket.

"That's my business," he explained, handing it out. "Sold enough of 'em today to fill this room and more."

Mr. Humble turned it over carefully between his yellow-stained and not too clean fingers.

"A heel," he remarked, with the air of one who has made a great discovery.

"A heel for a woman's shoe," the landlord added, not to be outdone.

"Two clever chaps, aren't you?" their companion observed approvingly. "Well, my business is selling these heels, and as there's no one else at present in the same line of business, I don't mind telling you that I do pretty well with them. Now, what might be your job nowadays, Mr. Humble?"

The latter moved uneasily in his chair. He watched his questioner suspiciously.

"I'm not in business at all for the present," he confessed. "I'm thinking of branching out in a new line."

"An artist, perhaps, when you're at it," Pank suggested.

"I might be called that," the latter acknowledged. "Landlord, don't sloop my drink over."

Champion Canary.

The conversation passed from heels to canaries. It appeared that the landlord was in possession of the champion bird of the city, and in the discussion which followed the former detective seemed to lose all his curiosity as to Mr. Humble's profession.

"Closing time in ten minutes, gentlemen," the landlord announced. "That being so," Ernest Pank said, with a grandiloquent gesture, "and I having had one of the best days of my life, we'll say the same again, Harry."

The latter chuckled as he rose. "You may make the money all right, young man," he commented, "but I will say this, you do know how to spend it!"

Mme. Veverka Contributes By Paintings and Literature

Believes Every Diplomat's Mate Should Have Some Practical Interest in Culture; Has Made Portraits of Famous Persons and Translated Wilder's Masterpiece.

Not society in its narrower sense but society in the largest and best sense of the word is served by the brilliant women of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington. Each of them brings to this country the best in the culture and tradition of her own.

This is the twelfth article in a series written for the purpose of making these interesting women better known to the American public.

By Elizabeth Young.

The snobbery into which a narrow society sometimes degenerates is abhorrent to Mme. Veverka, the gifted, intellectual and democratic wife of the Minister of Czechoslovakia.

Moreover, she believes art is the highest expression of the human soul; that it is international in its message and brings nations together.

"And that," she said, "is why I think every diplomat and every diplomat's wife should have some practical interest in art. To this idea I try to pay a humble contribution in some small way by my own painting. It is so interesting to paint portraits of all nations and to discover at last that we are all human."

"I have always considered society not as an aim in itself, but only as a means of contact with human minds and as a means to appreciate more my home. I divide my activities between my family and art."

Lauds "Prophet-President."

"Society should be refreshing and enlightening, bringing people together in an effort to create a broad brotherhood of intellect and refined people. I abhor above all the snobbery into which sometimes a narrow society degenerates. Refinement excludes snobishness."

"Brought up in a political atmosphere at home, I developed a dislike for petty politics, but I served a genuine interest in political movements from a broad point of view."

Femininity First Is Motif of New Evening Gown

Taffetas Reminiscent of Gibson Girl Epoch Shown in Paris Salon.

Paris, Feb. 2 (AP)—A glamorous evening mode decreeing "femininity first" entered the spring fashion pageant today following Maggy Rouff's first evening show of the season.

Crisp taffetas designed in a manner reminiscent of the "Gibson Girl" epoch, with big, balloon-shoulder sleeves, back bustle bows or ruffles and trains which swished as the mannequins glided across the floor, were outstanding models.

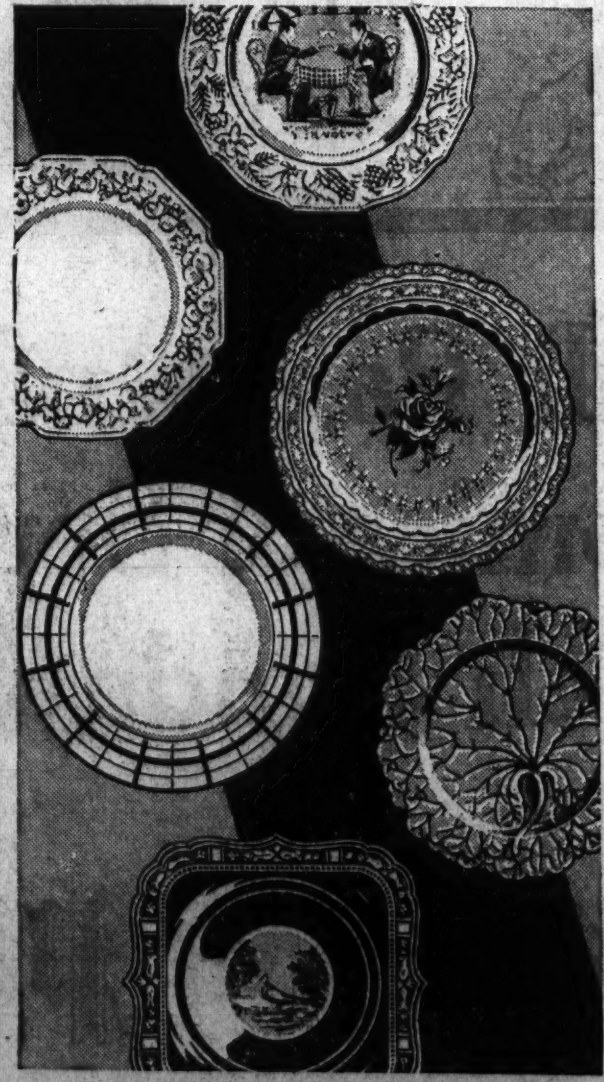

They appeared in such bright hues as emerald green, sky flower patterns and black and white checks. They were generally designed with low back and high front décolletés caught with a flashing diamond clip from each sleeve.

Another ultra-feminine note was seen in the fact that two mannequins had long hair, worn curled at the nape of the neck.

Taffetas, also widely used in the afternoon mode, is appearing in the showings in pert fitted little navy or black jackets worn with wool skirts of the same color and high-collared white organdie jabots.

Numerous black, navy, brown and white checked taffeta afternoon frocks are being shown designed with slender waisted silhouettes, skirts 7 inches from the ground, sleeves with fullness in the upper arm and low necklines with pleated frills framing the face like a flower.

Then there are many dark silk alpaca ensembles, combining a very loose three-quarter coat and slender frock with neck touches of white organdie.

Chinaware of the types described is available in Washington in all the better class shops and department stores.

Dollar Gains
More Strength
On Exchanges

London, Feb. 2 (AP).—Great Britain's financial heart continued to throb with excitement today over the American New Deal dollar while the undercurrent opinion was strengthened that President Roosevelt's latest monetary move was a step toward world financial stabilization based on gold.

If the American project envisaged a depreciation of the dollar in relation to British sterling, however, it failed dramatically in the London exchange market as the 50.00-cent dollar, instead of weakening as a potential aid to American exports, strengthened throughout the day.

Late in the day, the French franc was quoted at 6.30 cents, off 1 cent from a cent and 33 of a cent under the new parity of the dollar. This meant a premium for dollars of about 5 per cent or that $1 would buy $1.05 in gold in Paris.

The pound sterling dropped more than 7 cents to around $4.90, the lowest since November. International banking quarters were intrigued by Washington reports of a start at private stabilization discussions with London.

United States foreign trade in nonmetallic minerals in 1933 showed a substantial improvement over 1932, according to the minerals division, Department of Commerce.

Export trade increased from $23,470,004 to $30,372,368, or about 29 per cent, while imports showed an upward trend of 19 per cent, being $30,213,675 in 1932 and $36,078,287 in 1933.

The 1933 trade was, however, it is pointed out, below that for 1929. The 1933 export figure was 42 per cent of 1929, and imports were only 23 per cent of that period.

Upward Movement.

Most of the individual export items in 1933 shared in the upward movement. Cement, which showed the largest gain, increased 82 per cent in volume and 85 per cent in value, compared with 1932.

New Zealand Trade Reports Trade Improvement

The economic outlook for New Zealand appears brighter now than at any time in the last three years, according to Vice Consul W. W. Orrebaugh, Wellington, in a report made public by the Commerce Department.

At the close of 1933, the report points out, the export season was at its height and there was apparently no abatement of the trade improvement that began several months ago.

Encouragement to internal trade and to imports has developed through the higher prices obtained for wool which are reported to have been from 100 to 200 per cent over those of the 1932-33 season. As estimated production of wool in the year ending 1933-34 season is approximately 10 per cent below the preceding season's output, and as other countries also anticipate a decline in production, New Zealand should continue to be a strong competitor in world markets, the Consul reported.

The less promising factors in New Zealand's position at the end of 1933 appear in the unsatisfactory outlook for dairy produce, where the recession in world prices since July makes the industry apprehensive of its ability to continue an increased volume of sales in the British market.

Indications are, the report states, that there is an abundance of money in New Zealand which could be used in expansion of business. If the Dominion adheres to the present rate of exchange, pegged at 25 per cent above sterling, it is pointed out, a further increase in value of exports seems probable. The higher rate has contributed to place more money in circulation and to reduce bank rates for money to a lower level than for many years.

Grain Stabilization Group Sells 39,000 Bags of Santos Coffee.

New York, Feb. 2.—Raw sugar exports from the Philippines from November 1, 1933, to January 15, 1934, amounted to 246,881 long tons, against 236,225 tons exported during the same period in 1933-34, an increase of 4.5 per cent, according to cables to the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

Refined shipments for the same period totaled 11,195 tons, an 18.8 per cent decrease when compared with the 13,791-ton total during the 1932-33 period.

Shipments from January 1 to 15 of raw and refined were 59,616 tons, this year, against 44,903 during the first half of January, 1933.

Exports to U. S. Official exports to the United States during the calendar year of 1933 amounted to 1,062,576 tons, of which 1,008,260 was raw and 54,316 refined.

This compares with 1,000,250 tons exported during 1932, of which 944,026 tons were raw sugar and 56,224 tons refined.

The sale of 39,000 bags of the 500 bags of Santos coffee offered from the holdings of the Grain Stabilization Corporation at prices ranging from 10.25 to 10.76 cents per pound was announced on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange today.

Last Previous Sale. The last previous sale was held on October 3, last year, when the coffee brought from 5.86 to 9.25 cents per pound.

The allotment sold today had previously offered for bids on January 9, but all bids were rejected at that time. Since then the coffee market has advanced approximately 1/2 cent per pound.

This coffee was received from Brazil by the now extinct Farm Board two years ago in exchange for American wheat—1,050,000 bushels of wheat. The balance still unsold amounts to 136,000 bags. It was estimated that the coffee was worth about 8 cents at the time of the deal. The average price obtained on the 914,000 bags sold to date is 9.83 cents, which at profit on the transaction of about two and one-half million dollars, exclusive of warehouse, administration and other charges.

Radio Waves and Ripples

COLUMBIA is no respecter of persons when it comes to broadcasting recordings, particularly from as far away as London.

George Bernard Shaw was scheduled to broadcast in the "Whither Britain" series Tuesday. But Tuesday was Shaw's day for being out of London, so he had his speech recorded and took the next train for Bristol.

Columbia's scouts found out about it and canceled the broadcast. The British Broadcasting Corporation made everything right by arranging for Mr. Shaw to appear before the microphone in the person following day.

Big things are said to be in store for WJVS's Arthur Godfrey. Among other accomplishments of his quick trip to New York the other day, Godfrey reached an agreement with Columbia to do two afternoon sustaining programs a week built in the manner of his Sun Dial broadcast, except for the substitution of live talent for recordings.

In addition, Columbia is said to be ready to turn over to Godfrey's handling its American Revue, Sunday commercial program, and to arrange his schedule to permit his continuing as master of the Sun Dial and also to allow him to engage himself as Saturday night master of ceremony in a Broadway night club.

Jack Whiting, a barytone of parts, who starts work Friday on his first long-term radio contract as master of ceremony for Columbia's Marvelous Melodies Revue, is on view at the Earle this week. Whiting's prelude to screen and vaudeville was with "Take a Chance," "Hold Every-thing" and "America's Sweetheart."

The Marvelous Melodies show has for its principals Jack Denney's orchestra and Jeannie Lang and her three Rascals.

From the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt will send out a new folk music series Wednesday, February 21.

It is in this series that National hopes to show the contribution of folk tunes of the South to modern music. John Powell, Virginia composer and pianist, will explain the purpose of the recitals to be heard in subsequent weeks.

For years members of the U. S. Senate have been traveling to and from the Capitol and their offices in the Senate Office Building at the east end of the plaza in a tiny railway car without attracting more than a modicum of public attention.

But this morning the senators and their monorail rode themselves about to become the subject for a Nation-wide broadcast and, momentarily at least, a center of attraction from coast to coast.

It is all because a WJVS mind happened to be thinking up new ideas for broadcast while riding on the railway the other day. Announcer Robert Trout will ride the train and interview senators on their way to the Capitol 15 minutes before the Senate goes into session Monday, February 12.

For years members of the U. S. Senate have been traveling to and from the Capitol and their offices in the Senate Office Building at the east end of the plaza in a tiny railway car without attracting more than a modicum of public attention.

But this morning the senators and their monorail rode themselves about to become the subject for a Nation-wide broadcast and, momentarily at least, a center of attraction from coast to coast.

It is all because a WJVS mind happened to be thinking up new ideas for broadcast while riding on the railway the other day. Announcer Robert Trout will ride the train and interview senators on their way to the Capitol 15 minutes before the Senate goes into session Monday, February 12.

Jack Whiting, a barytone of parts, who starts work Friday on his first long-term radio contract as master of ceremony for Columbia's Marvelous Melodies Revue, is on view at the Earle this week. Whiting's prelude to screen and vaudeville was with "Take a Chance," "Hold Every-thing" and "America's Sweetheart."

The Marvelous Melodies show has for its principals Jack Denney's orchestra and Jeannie Lang and her three Rascals.

From the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt will send out a new folk music series Wednesday, February 21.

It is in this series that National hopes to show the contribution of folk tunes of the South to modern music. John Powell, Virginia composer and pianist, will explain the purpose of the recitals to be heard in subsequent weeks.

"Cap" Stubbs Saturday By Edwin

Walt Mason, Himself

The Bad Man.

The bad man of the frontier days knew not an instant's peace; he had to watch for vengeful jays, his watch must never cease. He had achieved a wide renown as artist with his gun; by shooting looted voters down this fair renown was won. He whittled notches now and then upon his weapon's stock, to indicate how many men he's sent to Boot Hill block. But now he had acquired his fame, his life was full of grief, for other bad men had one aim—to turn him into beef. They longed to see him lying dead, with gravel in his teeth, to strip the laurels from his head, to bear away his wreath. Men knew if they could make the grade, if they could neatly slay, their reputation would be made forever and a day. And so they hid behind the trees, together or alone, and tried to shoot him through the knees, or through his collarbone. They watched for him in alleys dark, they skulked behind the tents; he was indeed a shining mark for all aspiring jays. And soon or late the bad man took a chance that wasn't right, and then he cast his final look upon this world so bright. Some other bad man straightway sat upon the dead one's seat, while people aimed guns at his hat, and also at his feet. It was a sorry life to lead, a life that smelled of cheese; and yet the tales we used to read had heroes such as these.
